Chinese Reds Turn Down Peace Offer, Resume War

Vow Expulsion Of U. S. Forces, Utter Destruction Of Kuomintang

Shanghai (Thursday), Jan. 6 (AP).—The Chinese press reported that Communists began shelling government positions around Tientsin today after the Reds broadcast a scornful rejection of Chiang Kai-shek's peace offer.

The artillery fire broke a two-week lull which had settled on China's farflung battlefronts amid a rising clamor for peace, the Chinese newspapers in Shanghai reported.

A Red broadcast heard in Shanghai late Wednesday night had warned of the attack, declaring that "a general assault on besieged Peiping, Tientsin and Tangku (seaport for Tientsin) is imminent."

From Peiping, Associated Press Correspondent Spencer Moosa reported nothing more exciting than police beginning "a nightlong checkup for what they called undesirable elements." He added, however, that small-scale clashes were reported on Peiping's outskirts.

Peiping Lull Continues

Another indication that the lull at Peiping was expected to last for some time, was an announcement in Shanghai that commercial air service to Peiping would be resumed.

Government officials in Nanking—convinced the answer would be an emphatic "no" even before the Communist radio broadcast its reply—were reported packing again for a possible flight southward.

The Communist radio heard later at San Francisco broke its five-day silence on the peace overtures with two tough-talking broadcasts.

One threatened to attack historic Peiping at once unless it surrendered. The other said final victory was near and would mean "the complete destruction of the Kuomintang (government) reactionaries and the expulsion of the forces of American imperialist aggression from China."

Yangtze Crossing Forecast

An English language broadcast from North China quoted a Communist commentator as saying that in 1949 Red armies will cross the Yangtze into South China.

In Nanking, a reliable Chinese source said there was this evidence that Chiang and other top leaders had little faith in any peace bid:

1. That Chiang personally ordered four Nanking factories removed to Formosa, the island province considered a likely government refuge.

2. That the executive Yuan (cabinet) directed its ministries to pack certain archives and valuable equipment for shipment south.

Marines About to Quit Shantung U., Writer Says

Tsingtao, China (Thursday), Jan. 6 (AP).—A reliable Chinese journalist reported today the United States Marines were preparing to leave their barracks at Shantung University, despite official denials.

Y. C. Jao, editor of the English language Tsingtao Peoples' Herald, reported that "the university is proceeding with preparations to take over on January 25."

Jao said there are, at present, about 3000 Marines here. More than 600 other Leathernecks are stationed afloat on the Shanghai riverfront.

Vice Admiral Oscar C. Badger, commander of the Western Pacific Fleet denied yesterday the Marines would leave their billets at the university.

(It was learned in Shanghai reliably Wednesday that a letter from the Marines to Chinese authorities in Tsingtao had advised the lease on the campus would be terminated January 25. But some Navy officials said the letter was written 'by error" and had been cancelled.)

Atomic Agency Lists 'Criteria' For Selection of Employes

By Milton Magruder
United Press Staff Writer

The United States Atomic Energy Commission yesterday issued an official list of 18 "criteria" for deciding who can't be trusted to work on secret projects.

The commission explained that the list was intended to guide local managers of atomic installations in granting security clearances.

Although the FBI investigates all would-be atomic workers, it is up to field officials of the commission to decide whether the information turned up by the FBI warrants barring an individual from atomic work.

The commission instructed its field officials to weigh carefully "all the information presented, whether favorable or unfavorable," and make "an over-all, common-sense judgment," in each individual case.

It also ruled that the standards should be applied to the husbands or wives of atomic workers, as well as the employes.

Officials were advised to balance "any possible risks" involved in clearing a particular person against "the cost to the atomic program of not having his services."

When in doubt, the commission said, field officials should refer cases to the director of security in Washington.

The criteria were divided into two categories. The commission said the first nine carry a "presumption of security risk." It instructed field officials either to deny clearance in such cases or refer them to Washington.

The last half is composed of "classes of derogatory information where the extent of activities or the attitudes of the individual must be weighed." In these cases, field officials may grant or deny clearances on their own responsibility, or refer them to Washington.

In the first category were listed "those cases in which there are grounds sufficient to establish a reasonable belief" that the individual or his spouse has:

1. Committed or attempted to commit sabotage, espionage, or treason.

2. Associated with foreign espionage agents, or representatives of foreign nations "whose interests may be inimical to the interests of the United States." (Casual or official business contacts don't count, it said.)

3. Maintained active membership in an organization declared

New Palestine Peace Moves Made by U. S.

State Department Officials Confer in Washington, Cairo

(From Press Dispatches)

A new American effort to end the fighting in Palestine appeared to be in the making yesterday.

United States conferences with British and Egyptian officials were revealed as Israeli sources in Tel Aviv reported that the Jews had accepted the United Nations Security Council cease-fire order, and would so notify the U. N. shortly.

The peace reports came as the Israeli army disclosed officially that its forces had pushed 35 miles into Egypt last week, capturing three airports at El Arish and the important road junction of Abu Awugeila.

The Israeli army said its forces had withdrawn "according to plan" three days later after capturing several British-made Spitfires, quantities of war material, and prisoners.

The new peace effort apparently involved:

1. A conference at the State Department here between Sir Oliver Franks, British Ambassador to the United States, and Acting Secretary of State Robert A. Lovett yesterday afternoon. Leaving Lovett's office after the conference, Sir Oliver said: "Mr. Lovett and I reviewed the Palestine situation. We have discussed the prospects of peace and looked at the chances of a cessation of hostilities."

2. In Cairo yesterday, United States Charge d'Affaires Jefferson Patterson had an audience with King Farouk. Diplomatic officials said the occasion was the new American effort to keep the Palestine situation under control and speed a settlement. They said Patterson forwarded a United States request that the Arab states and Israel avoid enlarging the conflict. (The United States had expressed similar views to Israel earlier this week.)

3. In London, a British government spokesman said there was absolutely "no question" of Britain going to war with Israel. He declared such ideas were suggested by "dishonest propaganda."

4. Israeli officials denied a Cairo report that the biggest battle of the war raged on the Palestine side of the border. The Israelis said action was no more intensive yesterday than in the past several days.

The official disclosure that Israeli troops had penetrated into Egypt was made by Lieut. Col. Moshe Perlman, Army press chief. However, he declared Israel had no intentions of occupying Egyptian territory.

D. C. to Wait 10 Years for Clean Rivers

Sanitary Official Explains Problems Of Sewage Disposal

Within 10 years, through cooperative anti-pollution plans in this area, it is hoped that large portions of the Potomac River here will become safe for swimming.

This can be one accomplishment in proposals which include six million dollars for improvement of the District sewage disposal plant, Harold A. Kemp, District director of sanitary engineering, said yesterday.

In a talk before the Rotary Club of Washington, Kemp declared it is possible that within the decade:

1. The Potomac can be made suitable for swimming and other recreation above Key Bridge and below Mount Vernon.

2. The Anacostia River below Bladensburg, Md., and the Potomac from Key Bridge south to Fort Foote, 2½ miles below the District Line, can be used for all recreational purposes except swimming.

Dependent on Funds

Kemp said this can only result if funds are made available according to plan, and communities above and below Washington clear their share of the rivers as proposed by the Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin.

At present, he said, the Potomac above Great Falls is only "questionably safe" for swimming; between Key Bridge and Great Falls the river is suitable for all recreation which involves physical contact with the water, except swimming; from Hains Point to Key Bridge is only "questionably safe" for any recreation.

Because of present pollution, he said, the Potomac from Hains Point to Fort Foote, and the Anacostia below Bladensburg, "are unsuitable for any recreation purpose."

'A Foul Stream'

"The Anacostia River proper," he said, "is a foul stream which does probably several hundred thousand dollars damage yearly to boats and shore installations," and is often too foul for fish to live in.

Few people realize, he said, that on an average, "each of us contributes 4 pounds of pollution a day to our sewer system," while untreated sewage pours into our streams such bacteria as "typhoid, para-typhoid and dysentery."

When the District's sewage treatment plant at Blue Plains at the southern tip of the city, began operations in 1938, said Kemp, it was designed to remove 33 per cent of the pollution from 650,000 people.

At that time, he said, the river could "absorb" the pollution load

Traffic Prosecutor Hints

Radio Listening by Motorists Might Be Outlawed in District

The chief prosecutor of Traffic Court declared yesterday that it may prove illegal for a person to listen to his automobile radio when driving in Washington.

The legal opinion was expressed by Assistant Corporation Counsel Clark F. King after a blast at motorists who fail to pull to the curb when they hear sirens of emergency vehicles.

In a case yesterday, Harold A. Surles, 32, a map engineer, of 1315 20th st. nw., was charged with failing to yield right of way to fire engines on December 28. Surles said he didn't hear the sirens, and commented that his radio was turned on.

"One of these days somebody is going to get killed in an accident for some such reason as that," King said in permitting Surles to forfeit $25.

Asked by a reporter to amplify his comment on automobile radios as a hazard, King applied this reasoning:

"I'll admit that there is no regulation prohibiting the playing of car radios. But here's how I figure it. It is illegal to fail to give full time and attention to the operation of your automobile, and you may be fined $300. Next you surely are not giving full time and attention to your driving if you are listening to a radio. Therefore, it is illegal for drivers to listen to automobile radios."

Montgomery Today Elects First Council

51 Polling Places Open From 7 A. M. to 7 P. M., for Choice Of 7 Under Charter

By Roger B. Farquhar
Post Reporter

A seven-member council that will administer major changes in the Montgomery County government under the county's new charter will be elected at a county-wide special election today.

The council, which will replace the present five-man board of county commissioners, is expected to take office within the next three weeks.

Only 10 candidates are in the race for the seven posts. The winners will hold office only until 1950, when the next regularly scheduled election will be held. Subsequently councilmen will serve four-year terms.

The polls will be open from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m. at 51 polling places throughout the county.

Charter Group Backs 7

Holding the spotlight today will be a slate of seven candidates selected by the County Charter Committee, a civic group that successfully fought for the "home rule" charter adopted by county voters last November.

The charter document became effective last December 2, but its major provisions are inoperative until the winners of today's election take office.

Upon their installation, such major changes as "home rule," appointment of a $12,000-a-year county manager, revamping of county officers and the authority to issue bonds—all provided for in the charter—will become effective.

The seven Charter Committee candidates are receiving the backing not only of the powerful charter group, but also of the county Democratic organization.

On the charter "ticket" are:

P. Garland Ligon, District No. 1. A Democrat, Ligon is married, with five children, has been a county resident for 31 years and lives at Brinklow, Md. He is a general contractor and engineer, a draft board member and bank official. He is unopposed.

Operates Mill

Augustus R. Selby, District No. 2. A Republican, Selby is operator of a flour and feed mill in Germantown, Md., his home. He is married, with two children, is a bank director and building and loan association official and past president of Rockville Rotary Club.

Thomas C. Kelley, District No. 3. A Republican, Kelley is a Rockville attorney, one-time judge of the County Orphan's Court and former assistant legal adviser to the county commissioners. He is married, has three children, has been active in civic groups and lives in Darnestown, Md. He is a director of the charter committee and also is unopposed.

Mrs. Ralph Himstead, District No. 4. A Democrat, Mrs. Himstead is a Chevy Chase, Md., housewife, a director of the charter committee and a leader of the county League of Women Voters. She is married, has one child and was once a teacher of French.

J. Douglas Bradshaw, District No. 5. A Republican, Bradshaw is a Takoma Park attorney and corporation counsel of that community, living just outside the town limits. A Navy veteran of World War II, he is active in Takoma Park civic, fraternal and veteran groups.

Four Billions More in Taxes Asked in President's Program; 41.9-Billion Budget Predicted

Key Democrats Expect Truman's Figures to Set Peacetime Record

By The Associated Press

Key Democrats predicted yesterday that President Truman's new budget will call for the biggest peacetime outlay in United States history—$41,900,000,000—or about $283 for each citizen.

This tops the $39,500,000,000 figure for the current fiscal year but is far below the wartime mark of $98,700,000,000 set in fiscal 1945.

Details of the Administration's financial plans for the year beginning July 1 will not be known until Mr. Truman outlines them Monday. However, he gave top legislative leaders a budget preview at the White House shortly before telling a joint session of Congress about the state of the Union.

Representative McCormack (D., Mass.), the new House floor leader, told reporters after the White House conference:

"The budget is high, but absolutely tight. The requests are in line with demands and are absolutely essential."

Other Expenses Seen

President Truman's direct recommendation for a four-billion-dollar tax increase was coupled with a proposal for health insurance and other social security expansions that some members estimated would mean another six billion dollars—or a total increase of 10 billion dollars in general and security levies.

As for the budget, the lawmakers who attended the White House session said that slightly more than 15 billion dollars of the new outlays would be for military costs, including stockpiling of strategic materials and the first year cost of starting a universal military training program. The proposed military spending would be some three billion dollars over the current expenditures.

Mr. Truman's outline for his legislative plans for the coming years also included items which if adopted might add billions of dollars to the Federal financing program. Among these are Federal aid to education, housing, agriculture, bigger social security benefits and prepaid health and medical insurance.

Reaction Is Varied

The President's tax boost proposal brought varied reaction.

Chairman Doughton (D., N. C.) of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee said he is glad Mr. Truman laid down no "hard and fast rules" for writing a new tax program.

"The country will not look very favorably on increased taxes until the people are convinced we are not wasting money," he added.

Senator Taft (R., Ohio), the GOP policy leader, said he believes Government spending could be cut so there would be no need to boost taxes.

The President may shed further light on the general financial picture of his economic report to Congress Friday.

Suffrage Hopes Boosted

McGrath Appointed Chairman Of Senate District Committee

District hopes for suffrage got a shot in the arm yesterday with the elevation of Senator Howard McGrath (D., R. I.) to the chairmanship of the Senate District Committee.

In addition, the complexion of the committee was completely change with five new Democratic members.

The Democrats will have seven members and the Republicans six members on the committee.

SENATOR McGRATH
The new "mayor"

The Senate Democratic Steering Committee, in announcing McGrath as Washington's new "Mayor," also listed the following Democrats who will serve with him on the Senate District Committee:

Olin D. Johnston of South Carolina, Matthew M. Neely of West Virginia, Estes Kefauver of Tennesee, Lester C. Hunt of Wyoming, J. Allen Frear of Delaware and Bert H. Miller of Idaho.

The six Republican members of the committee may be named today at a Senate Republican caucus at 10 a. m.

On his record, McGrath is pro-suffrage. Traditionally, most Southern Democratic Senators have opposed suffrage for the District. In the Eightieth Congress, five of the six Democrats on the committee were from the South. In the new lineup, only two are from the South, and one of these, Kefauver, favors suffrage.

Aligned with Kefauver and McGrath in favor of suffrage are Neely and Hunt. Johnston has op-

Stand-by Powers To Impose Ceilings On Prices, Wages Are Requested

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

President Truman yesterday wrapped into a single package all he campaigned for in the last election, labeled it "A Fair Deal" and called congressional cooperation to put it over as a "must."

Four billion in new taxes, levied chiefly on corporations and middle-to-upper-bracket taxpayers, topped a program that "covered the waterfront" from a request for stand-by authority to impose price and wage ceilings to broad health and social reforms.

One brand-new proposal lifted many an eyebrow. In what some viewed as a club over "Big Steel," he asked Government plant expansion loans if needed to increase production of "shortage" materials. He proposed the Government itself build the plants "if action by private industry fails to meet our needs."

Applauded 33 Times

Mr. Truman was applauded 33 separate times as he delivered his 4000-word message to his first Democratic Congress in two years. Republicans joined weakly in the plaudits at times but later their leaders called it a "socialist manifesto."

Some GOP insurgents, however, joined Democratic leaders in terming it "moderate" and a progressive stride forward. How much of it gets through Congress in one or even two years may depend on Administration majorities on key committees and the duration of the Truman honeymoon.

Mrs. Truman and their daughter Margaret looked happily down from the executive gallery as Mr. Truman returned to the scene of his hair-raising battles with two Congresses and received one of his noisest ovations. The applause grew thin as he touched sharply controversial points in his program, reminiscent of some of his less enthusiastic campaign receptions.

Calls for Cooperation

But the House came up shouting when he ad-libbed into his speech, campaign style, a call for congressional cooperation to keep peace abroad and continue prosperity at home. He called cooperation with the new Congress "absolutely essential."

To veterans of the Democratic Seventy-ninth Congress and the Republican Eightieth, what the President asked was an oft-told story, hammered home in many a less receptive session. But yesterday a new cheering section swelled the applause, some 115 freshman House and Senate Democrats, who helped Truman campaign on just such a ticket.

Except in his tax recommendation, where he failed to specify excess profits levies in prescribing a corporate tax increase, Mr. Truman did not back up an inch on any of the once "too hot to handle" points he has repeatedly hurled at Congress.

He called again for enactment of the full civil rights program which split his party in the last election. Universal military training, hardly less controversial, was urged anew. Broadened social security coverage and an ex-

GOP to Seek 'Jim Crow' End In Maryland

Decision Reached In Caucus Before Legislature Meets

By Phillip Austensen
Post Reporter

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 5.—Republicans in the Maryland General Assembly agreed today to seek repeal of the State's "Jim Crow" laws.

The decision was reached in a party caucus preceding opening here tonight of the 90-day 1949 legislative session.

All Republican members from both houses of the legislature were present at the caucus, it was learned, and agreed unanimously to support the measure.

The actual bill, it was learned, has yet to be drafted.

Similar efforts have been made in previous legislative sessions, but so far have been unsuccessful. In 1947, a "Jim Crow" repealer was approved by the Senate but lost in the House. A similar bill won Senate approval, but met House defeat in the 1945 session.

The GOP delegates, in their caucus, also agreed to support a bill for repeal of Maryland laws requiring new residents to make declarations of intention of citizenship before voting.

There are 11 Republicans in the 29-member Senate, and 26 in the 123-member House.

The 1949 session opened quietly tonight at 9:26, and after roll call and a few preliminaries, both houses recessed until 2 p. m. Thursday.

Little change in leadership was evident in either house.

Officers in both House and Senate remained the same with C. Ferdinand Sybert (D., Howard) as speaker of the House and Joseph R. Byrnes (D., Baltimore City 5th) as Senate president.

F. Byrne Austin of Takoma Park was elected chief clerk of the House to succeed Jack Menton of Baltimore.

GOP Charges Bipartisan Issues Betrayal

'Politics' In Housing And Foreign Relations Assailed by Senators

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Republican Senators yesterday angrily accused their Democratic colleagues of playing politics with two formerly bipartisan issues—foreign relations and housing.

Three, Arthur H. Vandenberg (Mich.), Wayne Morse (Oreg.) and H. Alexander Smith (N. J.), attacked the division of the Foreign Relations Committee into eight Democrats and five Republicans. In the Eightieth Congress the division was seven Republicans to six Democrats.

Taking the floor in the course of this attack, Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) bitterly assailed several Senators on the Democratic side for offering a long-range housing bill, similar in many respects to the one he had introduced for two sessions jointly with two Democratic members, Allen J. Ellender (La.) and Robert F. Wagner (N. Y.).

The first he knew of the new bill, he said, was when it was shown to him a short time before it was introduced by Ellender, Wagner and five other Democrats.

In leading off the assault on the make-up of the new Foreign Relations Committee, Vandenberg termed the Democrats' action the "first partisan act in opposition to the spirit of bipartisan, nonpartisan foreign affairs in two years.

He expressed "great disappointment" and "profound regret" over what he called a "political decision," and one that is "implicit with hostility" to nonpartisan cooperation.

He did not question the right of the majority to hold the Republicans to only five places on the committee, but "I do question the wisdom of the act," he said.

It carried the "implication," he said, to the country that the Administration, in regard to its foreign policy, does not consider

Penitent Judge Fines Himself $10 For Drunkenness

Harlan, Ky., Jan. 5 (AP).—Special Harlan Circuit Judge Cleon K. Calvert today fined himself $10 on a charge of public drunkenness.

He showed up for yesterday's session of court but it was suspended for the day.

Shortly after taking the bench today, Judge Calvert, veteran Pineville attorney, said:

"I fine the court $10 for being drunk yesterday and I want to see that on the order book."

Members of the regular jury panel paid the judge's fine.

Judge Calvert was appointed to serve during the illness of Judge James S. Forester.

Court operated in a normal manner today.

379 Ministers Ask New York To Legalize Mercy Killings

New York, Jan. 5 (U.P.).—Leading Protestant and Jewish ministers of New York State today petitioned for a law to permit voluntary mercy killings under careful safeguards.

It was the largest group of religious leaders ever to publicly advocate voluntary euthanasia, now punishable as murder in all the 48 States. They sent their petition to every member of the State Legislature. Some 1000 New York physicians made a similar petition in December, 1947.

The ministers' petition, sponsored by the Euthanasia Society of America, declared that "the ending of the physical existence of an individual at his request, when afflicted with an incurable disease which causes extreme suffering is, under proper safeguards, not only medically indicated, but also in accord with the most civilized and humane ethics and the highest concepts and practices of religion."

The ministers advocated mercy killing under these safeguards:

1. The sufferer must submit a petition signed and attested to by him, and agreed to by his physician, requesting euthanasia.

2. This petition may be presented to a court of record, which then will appoint a committee of physicians to investigate the case.

3. If the physicians advocate mercy killing after investigation and the patient still desires it, the court may permit euthanasia.

A Roman Catholic official called the petition an attempt "to legalize a suicide-murder pact" and a "rationalization of the Fifth Commandment of God, 'Thou shalt not kill.'"

The Right Rev. Msgr. Robert E. McCormick, presiding judge of the tribunal of the Archdiocese of New York, said the ministers "would have the Legislature of New York State adopt the theory that every man has the right to commit suicide and the State the right to authorize murder."

". . . If the bill for voluntary euthanasia is passed," McCormick said, "the next attack will be to seek the legalization of compulsory euthanasia."

The petition signers included Harry Emerson Fosdick, minister emeritus of the Riverside Church; Henry Sloane Coffin, president emeritus of the Union Theological Seminary; W. Russell Bowie, dean of students of the Union Theological Seminary; Guy Emery Shipley, editor of the Churchman; Beverly N. Byrd, director of the division of Christian social relations of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and Rabbi Sidney E. Goldstein of the Temple Emanuel of New York City.

Silence Is Deafening

'Hill' Applauds Truman Until—He Asks $4 Billion Tax Boost

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

One thing was clear on Capitol Hill yesterday: No Senator or Representative got himself elected by promising to boost taxes.

The hot-cold reaction to President Truman's discourse on fiscal policy was something to see. It started off with on outburst of applause—this in response to his argument that the Federal budget had to be balanced and the Federal debt of 252-billion dollars reduced. Our prosperity depended on it, Mr. Truman said, and both Republicans and Democrats clapped their hands in agreement.

Then came the corollary, and a remarkable change in the lawmakers.

"I recommend," said Mr. Truman, "that the Congress enact new tax legislation to bring in an additional four billion dollars of Government revenue."

Not a handclap was heard in the House chamber. The silence on the Democratic side of the aisle was just as profound as on the Republican side. The only sound was that of the Chief Executive's voice as he stood before an American flag on the House dais, with oil portraits of Washington and Lafayette on either side of him.

It was harsh medicine that Mr.

By Sam Stavisky

Maybank, Banking and Currency Chairman, Speaks Charlestonese at Machine-Gun Pace

Senator Burnet Rhett Maybank, Democrat, of South Carolina, named chairman of the key Banking and Currency Committee yesterday, is perhaps the fastest-talking legislator on Capitol Hill.

SENATOR MAYBANK
Fast-talker

The handsome, ruddy 6-footer developed his machine-gun delivery as a cotton broker conducting a large part of his business over the long-distance telephone. "Had to talk fast or go broke," he once explained.

The South Carolinian quit his thriving brokerage to go into politics, but he never quite gave up his rapid-fire style of speech. This trait, combined with the Charleston version of the American language, often makes it virtually impossible to understand what Maybank is saying when he gets excited.

Unless, of course, you happen to be a Charlestonian.

Unusual Lingo

Charlestonese is a unique dialect which is strange even to the ears of other Carolinians. It's a lingo characterized by a clipped, low accent, flavored by the French Huguenot pioneers who settled around the seaport, with a touch of the Geechie and Gullah Negro dialects.

There are, however, champions of the "State of Charleston" who insist that their speech is the only pure English spoken in this country. And, of course, the rugged-appearing Maybank stands ever ready to defend "the pipple of my Stay-et"—meaning both South Carolina and Charleston.

In the recent elections, Maybank was sent to the Senate for the third time. A popular campaigner, he has never lost a political contest. He served successively, and successfully, as alderman, mayor, Governor and Senator.

The 48-year-old legislator was first elected to the Senate in 1941, to complete the unexpired term of Jimmy Byrnes, who'd been elevated to the United States Supreme Court. Since then, he has been one of the South's staunchest supporters of the Roosevelt and Truman Administration policies, except in the sensitive sphere of civil rights.

Housing Champion

But on questions of long-range, low-cost housing, slum-clearance, rent controls aand the like, Maybank has been a leading advocate, and as chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, he plans to press for a revised edition of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill.

South Carolina—as you will recall—went States Rights in the past election, but Maybank played it mum. After Truman was re-elected he pledged to back the Administration again—again excepting the civil rights program.

All three names of Burnett Rhett Maybank are recognized throughout South Carolina as deriving from the first families of the Palmetto State. David Maybank was sent by the English King to Charleston in 1670 to buy land from the Indians. David never went back.

Though a member of the old Southern aristocracy, Maybank had no phobia against working with his hands—he dug up and sold crabs as a youngster. He has an easy manner in getting on with people, all kinds of people, and is generally referred to as "Burney."

Served in World War I

Senator Maybank is a graduate of Porter Military Academy and College of Charleston. He served in naval aviation in World War I. In 1923 he married Elizabeth deRosset Myers, who died in 1947 after a lingering illness. They have a son and two daughters. Libby, the youngest daughter, is attending Holton Arms School here.

Last month Senator Maybank married Mrs. Mary Randolph Pelzer Cecil, widow of Rear Adm. Charles P. Cecil, and member of a prominent Charleston family. They'll be living temporarily at the Mayflower. In Charleston the Maybank residence is a historic colonial home, one of the oldest in the country.

A horseman and hunter, "Burnie" Maybank, is something of a work-grind while Congress is in session. Now and then he gets that cooped-up feeling, tears away from the Hill and takes off on a long walk by his lonesome.

Appointments In Senate Set By Democrats

Democratic Party choices for Senate committee members, obviously chosen to smooth passage of President Truman's legislative program, were announced yesterday.

At the request of Senate Republican leadership, the Democratic list will not be presented to the Senate until tomorrow. Democrat action in changing the ratio of memberships between the two parties on several committees, upset their plans, Republican leaders claimed. Republicans will meet today to name their committee members.

In two committees the prospect of tough sledding for part of President Truman's program, as outlined in his state of the Union message yesterday, was indicated.

Maybank Appointed

Senator Burnet R. Maybank (D., S. C.) a foe of price controls, was named chairman of the Senate Banking Committee that will act on Mr. Truman's newest anti-inflation program, including standby price controls.

Maybank got the position when Senator Robert F. Wagner (D., N. Y.), ranking Democrat on the committee, declined on the grounds of ill health.

The second committee where Mr. Truman's program may be in danger is the Finance Committee, that will consider any tax legislation. This committee, with a ratio of seven Democrats and six Republicans, has two members that have Senator Harry Flood Byrd (Va.).

The committees where the Democrats will have the top-heavy majority of eight to five are Labor, Banking, Agriculture, Judiciary, not always seen eye to eye with Mr. Truman on tax matters, Chairman Walter F. George (Ga.) and Rules, Commerce and Public Works.

Bad Night for Driver . . .

The Washington Post

"END BOULEVARD"—The driver of this Buick convertible identified by police as Oree Williams, 28, a messenger, of 1838 I st. ne., put up $25 collateral last night on a charge of failing to give full time and attention to driving. The story, as told by police, is that Williams said he (1) swerved to avoid striking a car and ran into the front of an oncoming street car; (2) lost control of his auto and ran into a brick post in front of 131 Florida ave. nw.; (3) jumped a brick wall in front of 133; ran over the lawn and struck the brick steps in front of 135, where the car came to a stop. Damage to Williams' car was estimated at $400, and to the brick walls of the houses at $200

23 New U.S. Judgeships Sought

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

A bill to create 23 new Federal judgeships, two of them in the District of Columbia, was introduced in the Senate yesterday by Senator McCarran (D., Nev.).

The two additional judges in the District would be assigned to the United States Court of Appeals, increasing the number from six to eight. This increase, McCarran said, was necessary to take care of an increase in civil litigation exceeding that in any other court of appeals in the country.

"The number of cases filed in this court," he said, "increased from 264 in 1947 to 348 in 1948. Because of its location in the Capital of the Nation, the court receives many more cases involving Federal administrative agencies and high Government officials than the Courts of Appeals of other circuits.

"The pending case load per judge at the end of the fiscal year 1948 was 45, compared with an average for all circuits of 28, and was the highest in the country."

He said the average time for disposition of cases heard by the District court was 8.7 months as compared with 6.3 months for all other Courts of Appeals. McCarran quoted Chief Judge Harold M. Stephens of the Court of Appeals here as estimating that 370 cases would have to be settled this fiscal year by opinion after argument.

"If this could be done," said McCarran, "it would require each of the six present judges to write some 62 opinions during the year, which compares with an average of 27 opinions per year written by the judges of the court during the past nine fiscal years. The addition of two judges will still require a high average output."

For the rest of the country the bill would provide one new circuit judge for the Court of Appeals in each of these circuits: Third (Philadelphia), Seventh (Chicago) and Tenth (Denver).

It would provide 18 additional district judgeships, of which four would be in the Southern District of New York, two in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania; two in the Western District of Pennsylvania; one in the District of New Jerrsey; one in the Northern District of Georgia; one for the Northern and Southern Districts of Florida; one for the Southern District of Texas; two in the Northern District of California; one each in Districts of Southern California, Oregon, and Kansas, and would make permanent the present District judgeship for Eastern and Western Missouri.

Message Comment Has Wide Range

By Truman

Federal Aid For Schools Urged Again

President Truman yesterday renewed his request for a multi-million-dollar program of Federal aid to education—and this time there seemed to be a better-than-even chance he would get it.

He told Congress in his state of the Union message it was "shocking that millions of our children are not receiving a good education." And he added that schools are crowded and obsolete while low salaries are driving teachers into other jobs.

At the same time, Senator Robertson (D., Va.) reintroduced his Eightieth Congress measure to provide 300 million dollars in grants and an additional 300 million dollars in loans for public school buildings and related facilities. The funds would come from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The National Education Association, representing more than 775,000 teachers, immediately promised its support to Mr. Truman's program.

"The shortage of qualified teachers is acute," the association said. "It affects in some measure all States and territories. The only permanent relief from this shortage is Nation-wide recognition of teaching as a profession through the payment of salaries which will attract capable people to acquire through professional education the skills needed in good teaching.

"The President's statement that 'these school problems will become more acute as a result of the tremendous increase in the enrollment of our elementary schools in the next few years' is a warning that quick action is needed. The rapidly increasing birth rate associated with the war years is now affecting the early grades in school and will continue to swell enrollments for the decade ahead. Inability of some school systems to accommodate these extra students is already forcing part-time school sessions. Even in some of our large wealthy cities, children go to school in three shifts a day because school housing is not sufficient to accommodate all pupils at one time."

Ellender Promises Action

Senator Allen J. Ellender (D., La.), one of the backers of such legislation in the last session, already has announced it will be reintroduced early in this session.

The program would have cost an estimated 300 million dollars the first year of operation. It would guarantee that every State would spend at least $50 per pupil per year for education. Poorer States would get the most Federal help.

The legislation cleared the Senate last session and was approved by a House Labor Subcommittee headed by Representative Edward O. McCowen (R., Ohio) but Chairman Fred A. Hartley (R., N. J.) blocked action in the full committee.

This session the Labor Committee will be headed by Representative John Lesinski (D., Mich.), who has indicated he favors the proposal.

The measure also was expected to get favorable action again in the Senate where Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) was one of its backers last year. Taft is chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee.

Under Mr. Truman's proposal, the education program would be administered by a new agency with full Cabinet rank. The agency also would handle Federal health matters and the Social Security program.

Opponents of Federal aid to education have argued that it would tend to concentrate control of the Nation's schools in Federal hands.

Senator Robertson, commenting on his own bill, said:

"Our population is increasing more rapidly than was anticipated and this, together with wartime restrictions upon construction, has resulted in an accumulated need for school buildings estimated last year by the United States Office of Education at $6,600,000,000.

"The States and local school districts, faced with the related problems of providing more teachers with increased pay to compensate for higher living costs, are having great difficulty in financing building programs that are regarded as essential. This is a field in which Federal assistance is justified."

To Lead Symphony

Minneapolis, Jan. 5 (U.P.).—Antal Dorati, 42-year-old conductor of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, today was named to succeed Dimitri Mitropoulos as conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony.

By The Associated Press

Democrats in control of the new Congress generally applauded and promised support for most of the program President Truman laid down in his state of the Union message.

Southern Democrats provided an exception when they sat silent through his renewed proposals for civil rights laws.

On the Republican side, G. O. P. leaders appeared aghast in their reactions to the amount of money they said would be required to carry out the President's proposed extension of government in social and economic fields.

But Republicans were not alone in asking: "Where is the money coming from?" Many members of both parties in the House and Senate took a wait-and-see attitude on Mr. Truman's suggestion for four billion dollars in new taxes to carry out his broad program.

Wide Range of Comment

As for his message as a whole, there was the widest range of comment.

Senator Lucas of Illinois, floor leader for Senate Democrats, said the program was "one designed to meet the needs of the great majority in this country."

Senator McGrath (R. I.), Democratic national chairman, said: "I thought the speech completely kept faith with Mr. Truman's campaign and the party platform."

Representative McCormack (Mass.), House Democratic floor leader, called it "a great message—sound and constructive."

Speaker Sam Rayburn (D., Tex.) said the address would make a "splendid appeal" to the people of the United States and the world. He conceded there will be a division of opinion on some of the domestic issues.

Many Republicans were critical. Representative Hugh Scott, jr. (Pa.), GOP national chairman, said "Mr Truman is rolling high dice with the people's money. If Mr. Truman has his way this will be known as the grab-bag and payoff Congress"

Sees "Super New Deal"

Senator Bridges (R., N. H.) tagged the proposals "in the main a super-New Deal program which means bigger government, greater spending and higher taxes."

Senator Taft (Ohio), chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, said he agreed with and will support some of the President's recommendations. But if all of them are adopted, he said, "we shall have a totalitarian Federal Government in Washington.

Chairman George (D., Ga.) of the Senate Finance Committee said: "I am withholding any comment on raising taxes in the amount of four billion dollars or any other amount at this time." He added that he wants to see the budget first.

Labor Act Study Urged

Reaction to Mr. Truman's proposal for repeal of the Taft-Hartley labor law and substituting the Wagner Act with amendments for it likewise found bitter opposition and warm support. Many legislators expressed the opinion that there should be extensive study before writing new legislation.

Representative Hoffman (R., Mich.), promised to fight repeal of that law "to the bitter end."

Senator Hoey (D., N. C.): "I am opposed to any outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley law and I think the law should be changed only by careful substitution."

Representative Martin of Massachusetts, House Republican leader, said of the President's program generally:

"The President has recommended, as everybody expected he would, that Congress provide many billions of dollars to pay for his campaign promises. If the Democratic Congress agrees to his request in full, the country is in for some dizzy days."

Senator Wherry (Neb.), Senate Republican floor leader, said the Nation cannot have Mr. Truman's program and solvency too.

Modification Need Seen

Senator Morse (R., Oreg.) said the President's proposals will require "modification and in some instances substitution if the people's interests are to be protected."

Senator Kem (R., Mo.): "The President has given us a pattern for a socialized state and a new era of unbridled public spending."

Senator Myers (Pa.), assistant Senate Democratic leader: "The President's message . . . gave renewed assurance to the American people that we meant what we said in our platform and he meant what he said in the campaign."

Representative Halleck (R., Ind.): "The complete recklessness of the President's proposals, taken as a whole, is clear evidence that the antiradicals in Congress have a real job to do in the country to avoid disaster."

Representative Chelf (D., Ky.): "He's still the champ."

Area School Building Cost Placed at 115 Million

Cost of school construction needed in Greater Washington has been estimated at 115 million dollars. This includes 38 million for the District, 40 million for nearby Maryland and 37 million for adjacent Virginia.

Health Insurance Bill Is Filed On Heels of Truman's Demand

Within minutes after President Truman had finished his message yesterday in which he asked for Nation-wide compulsory health insurance, legislation embodying many of his suggestions was offered in both houses of Congress.

Sponsoring the measure were Senators J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.), Robert F. Wagner (D., N. Y.), James E. Murray (D., Mont.) and Representative John D. Dingell (D., Mich.).

Provisions of Measure

The legislation, similar to that introduced by the same sponsors at the last session, contains the following provisions:

1. Health insurance for 125 million persons, with free choice of doctor, and local administration.
2. Extension of Federal old age insurance to cover 25 million more more persons and to double present average benefits.
3. Insurance to provide benefits when an insured person is out of work due to sickness or disability.
4. Extension and liberalization of unemployment insurance and employment service programs.

The measure, known as the National Health Insurance Bill, is the first of a series of bills to be introduced "within the next few weeks" the sponsors said. This series, they said, will be the "Administration's program of legislation to expand and liberalize the entire social security program."

Financing Methods

The statement did not indicate how the program would be financed. But a spokesman for Senator Murray said the plan would be "identical" with the one proposed in the last Congress, which provided for a 3 per cent payroll tax to pay the way.

The American Medical Association is opposed to the health insurance program on the grounds that it would lead to "socialized medicine."

President Truman, in his State of the Union Message, told Congress that "we must have, without further delay, a system of prepaid medical insurance which will enable every American to afford good medical care."

Some of the same provisions are contained in a separate bill presented in the House by a Republican, Representative Russell V. Mack (Wash.). Mack's bill would raise old-age insurance payments by 50 per cent, and broaden the coverage of the social security system.

Vandenberg Urges Dr. Bowman as Member of AEC

Dr. Isaiah Bowman, retiring president of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, yesterday was recommended by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.) for membership on the Atomic Energy Commission.

Vandenberg said that Bowman is one of the Nation's "greatest scientists, greatest administrators and greatest patriots."

The retirement of William W. Waymack of Iowa left a vacancy on the commission. Senator Brien McMahon (D., Conn.), incoming chairman of the congressional Atomic Energy Committee, said after a White House visit Tuesday that he had recommended three men to President Truman. He declined to name them.

Bowles Sworn In As Conn. Governor After Compromise

Hartford, Conn., Jan. 5 (AP).—Chester Bowles was sworn in today as Governor of Connecticut after a Republican threat to block his inauguration was settled by a legislative compromise.

The wartime OPA administrator took the oath of office at 5:40 p. m., almost four hours behind schedule.

The legislature is composed of a Democratic-controlled Senate and a predominantly Republican House.

The partisan battle stemmed from the results of the November 2 election, closest in Connecticut history. Republicans carried the State in the presidential race, but Democrats elected Bowles.

Republicans had demanded a recount of the returns in the State races. The compromise called for the appointment of a six-man legislative committee to recommend new election laws designed to avert similar disputes in the future.

President Defies Southerners By Full Civil Rights Demand

By the United Press

President Truman flung down the gauntlet to Southern Democratic Congressmen yesterday by repeating in full his demands for the civil rights legislation that touched off last year's "Dixiecrat" revolt.

The Southerners immediately took up the challenge.

In his State of the Union message Mr. Truman blasted the hopes of numerous Democrats who expected him at least to soft pedal part of his disputed program in the interests of party harmony.

But the Missourian, who won a surprise election victory without the electoral votes of four "Solid South" States, told the lawmakers without qualification:

"The civil rights proposals I made to the Eightieth Congress I now repeat to the Eighty-first Congress.

"I stand squarely behind those proposals."

Gets Cold Reception

His punch line got a cold reception. After a thin rattle of scattered handicaps, there was thick silence.

Mr. Truman's program calls for passage of Federal antilynching and antipoll-tax laws; establishment of a Federal agency (Fair Employment Practices Commission) to fight racial discrimination in jobs; outlawing "Jim Crowism" in interstate public carriers; and setting up a new branch of the Justice Department to prosecute violations of civil rights.

Representative Joseph R. Bryson (D., S. C.) told reporters the Southerners "will fight it to the last ditch."

"You can afford to lose but you can't afford to compromise," he said.

Some other Dixie lawmakers promised bitter opposition but voiced belief the program will be passed despite their efforts.

Representative John L. McMillan (D., S. C.) said "It looks like he will get what he wants. But I don't see why he should try to tear the whole world apart just because he was reelected."

Representative Eugene E. Cox (D., Ga.) predicted passage but said "It will certainly result in creating the greatest social disturbance the country has ever known."

Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) took a wait-and-see attitude.

"I'll have to see the bills," he said. "I'm for removing the poll tax, but some parts of the program I'm against."

A Republican, Representative Samuel K. McConnell, jr., of Pennsylvania, said he did not think there would be "much of a fight" over any part of it except legislation to set up the Fair Employment Practices Commission. He doubted if the FEPC would be enacted.

Before Mr. Truman's speech, some Southern Democrats had indicated they would not oppose the President's request for anti-lynch and anti-poll-tax bills if the Administration would drop the FEPC bill.

The first bill to carry out part of the civil rights program was introduced by a Republican. Senator Irving M. Ives (R., N. Y.) reintroduced a bill pigeonholed by the Eightieth Congress to outlaw racial, religious or nationality discrimination in employment.

Committee Gets Texas Vote Inquiry Request

A request for a Senate investigation of the senatorial Democratic primary run-off in Texas last August was referred to the Senate Rules Committee yesterday.

Lyndon B. Johnson, former House member who was sworn in Monday as a Senator, narrowly defeated former Governor Coke Stevenson in the primary election.

A petition signed by hundreds of Texans asked an investigation of the primary.

New Move Pledged On Election Change

By The Associated Press

A new effort to change the Nation's 162-year-old system of electing a President is promised by Senators Lodge (R., Mass.) and Kefauver (D., Tenn.).

Senator McCarran (D., Nev.), Judiciary Committee, pledged that his group will give the bipartisan resolution "careful study."

Lodge told a reporter that the November election provided a "tremendous impulse" for a change in the present system.

A shift of 25,000 votes in California and Ohio, would have thrown the presidential election into the House of Representatives. Without those States, President Truman would have lacked the 266 electoral votes needed for a majority.

Provisions of Resolution

The Lodge-Kefauver resolution would:

1. Abolish the present electoral college, but retain the electoral vote now guaranteed to each state by the Constitution.

2. Give each presidential candidate an electoral vote in proportion to the popular vote that he polled within a given State. Under the present system it is customary for the candidate receiving the greatest popular vote in a State to get all of its electoral votes.

3. Award the Presidency to the person having the greatest number of presidential electoral votes. In case of a tie electoral vote, the candidate receiving the greatest popular vote would become President.

4. The Vice President would be elected in the same manner.

The proposal would eliminate two procedures now possible under the electoral college system: (a) The election, in a close race, of a President by the House of Representatives, and (b) election of a President who did not receive the greatest popular vote.

Meanwhile, revised official returns as reported to the State Department by the 48 States showed yesterday that the total vote cast for President last November 2 was 48,690,075.

Addition of 9659

This is 9659 more than previously reported by State canvassing boards and compiled by the Associated Press last December 10.

The difference is due to revisions in official figures since then, additions of some minor party votes previously unreported, and some further minor corrections.

Here is the way the new total vote was divided:

Harry S. Truman, Democrat, 24,104,030.

Thomas E. Dewey, Republican, 21,970,986.

J. Strom Thurmond, States rights, 1,169,118.

Henry A. Wallace, Progressive, 1,156,883.

Norman Thomas, Socialist, 139,543.

Claude A. Watson, Prohibition, 103,343.

Edward Teichert, Socialist-Labor, 29,240.

Farrell Dobbs, Socialist-Workers, 13,611.

Scattered, 3,321.

Today, the electoral college vote will be counted and officially recorded at a routine joint session in the House chamber, presided over by Senator McKellar (D., Tenn.), Senate president pro tem. The final electoral vote was Truman 303, Dewey 189, and Thurmond 39.

The new official figure changed Mr. Truman's plurality over Governor Dewey to 2,133,044. On December 10 it was 2,135,336. However, Mr. Truman did not receive a majority of all votes cast.

Cugat Band May Play at Ball Jan. 20

George Jessel

Join ranks of Inaugural ceremony stars

The third "name" band to play at the Inaugural Ball, January 20, will be that of Xavier Cugat, if arrangements can be made to fly his orchestra to Washington from an engagement the night before, it was disclosed yesterday.

Negotiations are still under way to round out the trio of popular orchestras. Guy Lombardo and Benny Goodman have already been signed to appear.

The first Negro musical combination to appear at an inaugural celebration was officially announced yesterday as committed for the Gala on January 19. It will be Lionel Hampton's band.

Other nationally famous stars who will appear, according to an announcement by Carter Barron, chairman of the parade and special events committee of the inaugural, include George Jessel, Gene Kelly, Kay Starr and Jane Powell.

In the classical field, Lawrence Tibbett and Feruccio Togliavini, star of the Metropolitan Opera, will appear, along with concert singers Dorothy Maynor and Lucy Monroe.

A committee official said Governor Folsom of Alabama announced yesterday that the University of Alabama's 150-piece band and Auburn Polytechnic Institute's 100-piece band will participate in the inaugural parade.

In Washington, the Veterans of Foreign Wars announced that the senior drum and bugle corps of the Lieut. Norman Prince Post in Boston also will be in the parade.

Chairman Hildreth will present special inaugural auto tag "No. 1" to President Truman at 11:30 a. m. today. Ready for distribution to committee officials and Government dignitaries are 1500 such plates.

A controversy over which picture of President Truman would appear on the official inaugural program appeared ended yesterday with the selection of a Signal Corps photograph.

Army Acts to Cut Reserves; Byrnes Heads Review of Size

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

The Army moved yesterday to cut back its National Guard and Reserve programs—based since the war-end on adoption of universal military training—to a more realistic basis.

This step—interpreted by many as abandonment of hopes for early passage of UMT—came as President Truman again asked Congress to approve such a law.

Since VJ-Day, the Army has based its mobilization plans and Guard-Reserve programs on the expectation of approval of UMT. The appointment yesterday of a top-flight, military-civilian committee to reexamine the size of the National Guard and Organized Reserve was accepted in Pentagon circles as a shift from reliance on compulsory to voluntary methods for maintenance of these groups.

It is expected to result in a reduction in the Nation's M-Day (Mobilization Day) forces and probably a cut in the present number of Guard divisions or other units now maintained on a skeletonized basis.

Byrnes Heads Group

The new committee is headed by former Secretary of State James F. Byrnes, and consists of two other prominent civilians and three top-ranking officers from the Regular Army, Guard and Reserve.

Army Secretary Kenneth C. Royall, who appointed the group, stated that its job is to determine the strength of the Army Reserve components in the light of practical conditions today.

He told The Washington Post that the factors which make a re-examination of the size of the Guard and Reserve essential now probably call for "a downward revision in the number and strength of units to be maintained."

These factors he said, are: (1) failure of adoption of UMT; (2) adoption of an over-all strategic plan to replace prior mobilization plans of the Army; (3) an expected lack of funds and manpower to carry out the more ambitious plans adopted at the close of the war.

UMT Still Desired

Royall declared that the appointment of the Byrnes committee, and a probable cut in the number of Guard combat units, did not mean a weakening in his department's desire for UMT.

"We must prepare for two contingencies, if we get it or if we don't," he stated. "But we can't wait for it."

Most of the comment on Capitol Hill following the President's message was that UMT would not be passed.

Representative Carl Vinson (D., Ga.), who will head the House Armed Services Committee, said that universal training legislation should not be considered by Congress while the draft is still on the books.

While personally in favor of UMT, Vinson said consideration of the program should be put off until 1950 when the draft law comes up for possible renewal.

Backed by Forrestal

In this view, he seems backed by Defense Secretary James Forrestal, who declared recently in his annual report that UMT is necessary and should be adopted as a "successor" to the draft. He did not include it in his legislative program, outlined in that report.

There were clear indications yesterday that Mr. Truman's recommendation of UMT came as something of a surprise to Pentagon chiefs.

Senator Millard Tydings (D., Md.), new chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, yesterday introduced a bill calling for a modified form of UMT. It would require all youths of 18 to take four months of military training, followed by service in the Guard or Reserve. Tydings presented the bill on behalf of the American Legion.

Minimum of Six Months

The Army has opposed the Legion bill as providing too short a period of service. Six months is the minimum training wanted by military chiefs.

Under plans approved at the Pentagon just after VJ-Day, the strength of the National Guard was fixed at 688,000 officers and men, organized into 27 divisions, 21 separate regimental combat teams and various supporting forces. Twenty-five Organized Reserve divisions and large supporting forces also were planned. Recruits were to come from graduates of UMT camps who would be required to serve in such components.

The Guard is now slightly over 300,000 men strong. Maj. Gen. Ellard Walsh, adjutant general of Minnesota and president of the National Guard Association, said recently a survey made by Guard chiefs concluded that the Guard could not be built beyond 375,000 to 400,000 without UMT.

All of the 27 Guard divisions and 21 combat teams are organized, but still are skeletonized. The 25 Reserve divisions are mainly on paper. One of the problems to be considered by the Byrnes committee is whether to cut back the number of Guard divisions, cut out more supporting units or keep all of them skeletonized. In the latter event, they would not be available as M-Day forces.

Forrestal Code Secrecy Bill Due for Committee Scrutiny

By The Associated Press

Representative Celler (D., N. Y.) indicated yesterday that a bill to tighten the secrecy guards around Government codes may be in for a rough reception.

The bill, sent to Capitol Hill by Secretary of Defense Forrestal, was referred to the House Judiciary Committee. Celler, who is due to head the committee, told a reporter he hadn't seen the measure up to last night, but—

"I'm suspicious of these proposals based on 'classified information' without any indication as to who does the classifying."

Careful Scrutiny

He said the bill "will have to be scrutinized carefully."

The measure would set a maximum fine of $10,000 and imprisonment for 10 years, or both, for handing over to "unauthorized persons" any "classified information" concerning codes or transmission devices used by the United States or any foreign country.

"The joker," said Celler, "is in that 'classified information' clause.

"Some magazine writer might innocently turn out a good technical article on a scientific subject, and find himself in trouble because somebody's office assistant thought it contained some good stuff that should be stamped 'classified.'"

Forrestal's Plea

In submitting the bill, Forrestal wrote that existing legislation is "far too limited in application to afford needed protection to certain highly secret Government activities."

He said the measure represents the view of the Army, Navy, Air Force, the Central Intelligence Agency and the State Department.

The bill would not "in any way" control information transmitted by code and cipher, Forrestal added, "unless the information was obtained by clandestine interception and cryptanalysis."

Bipartisan Issue 'Politics' Charged

"Republican senators quite trustworthy."

He pointed out that for two years under Republican leadership the committee has been divided seven to six, and that "not for one single second" had there been any question of the nonpartisan nature of their actions.

Cites "Critical Occasions"

"On 47 critical occasions in those two years," Vandenberg shouted, "the actions of the Eightieth Congress proved that it was not the worst Congress, the President of the United States notwithstanding, but the best Congress in our history. In every crisis the committee voted 13 to 0 in behalf of the national welfare."

In closing his speech, the Michigan Senator declared that had the Republicans been given a sixth place on the committee they would have named a "representative for the great West Coast of this country." As it is, he said, the committee will be organized "again without a member from the West Coast, which has such a definite interest in the affairs of the committee." He said its record under his chairmanship was one of which he would everlastingly be proud.

In reply, Senator Alben W. Barkley (D., Ky.), Vice President-elect, who headed the committee that made the Democratic devision, denied it as a "partisan decision." He pointed out that the Democratic majority is twice as large as the Republican majority was two years ago.

He pointed out that when the Republicans organized the Congress two years ago three Democrat members were dropped from the Foreign Relations Committee—and that a large number of others had since asked service with it. "We had a problem to work out regarding our own membership."

Earlier Barkley had remarked that he couldn't understand why five Republicans "couldn't be as nonpartisan as six."

Morse made a dramatic offer to withdraw his name from consideration as the sixth Republican on the commitee if the Democratic majority would reconsider its action. He intimated that he understood one reason the Democrats had cut the Republican representation was because they wished to keep him off.

He asserted the action was a blow at the leadership of Vandenberg, and urged that the Democratic steering committee consider the value of that leadership in the last two years.

Morse shouted that "the Democrats propose to play politics with war and peace." A "real bipartisan relationship," he declared, "means mathematical equality as far as possible."

Barkley replied that the committee action had not been aimed at Morse—that he had not known that Morse was to have been named if the Republican membership had remained at six. He regretted that the West Coast had no membership, but called attention to the fact that it hadn't had such representation for several years.

In attacking the introduction of the housing bill, Taft related in detail the "bipartisan cooperation" that had sponsored the bill for five years. The present bill, he said, had been "prepared without my information." Ellender, he said, had called him up "an hour before we met and showed it to me."

Saw 'Substantial' Changes

"I had no personal opportunity to read the bill and find out the changes," he said, although he said he had seen some changes that were "substantial."

"I regret very much that I am unable to add my name to the bill," he said, adding that "Senators Flanders and Tobey also declined."

In addition to Ellender and Wagner, the housing bill is sponsored by Senators Burnet R. Maybank (D., S. C.), John J. Sparkman (D., Ala.), Lister Hill (D., Ala.), Francis J. Myers (D., Pa.), and Russell Long (D., La.).

The 46-page measure provides for slum clearance and rural housing as well as publicly financed urban developments. The total cost for the over-all seven-year program would be $4,229,500,000.

The public housing section calls for 150,000 dwelling units during the 1949-50 year beginning next July 1. The number would be increased by 150,000 each year through 1955 to a grand total of 1,050,000.

The cost would increase each year, starting at a mxaimum of 85 million dollars in 1949 and increasing 90 millions each year to a maximum of 445 million.

The bill would provide 500 million dollars in grants and 1250 million in long-term loans for local governments for slum clearance.

Farm Loans Authorized

The Agriculture Department would be authorized to make loans and grants for building and repairing homes in rural areas over a four-year period.

It could make long-term, low-interest loans and grants for repairs or new construction on "adequate farms" that appear to be self-supporting. Loans would be limited to 25 million dollars the first year, 50 million dollars in 1951-52, 75 million dollars the next year and 100 million dollars in the final year. Grants would be limited to $500,000 the first year and increased by 500 million dollars a year to a two-billion-dollar total.

The department also could make outright grants of $500 a family for repairs on substandard farms that show no signs of being made permanently self-supporting.

The public housing section specifies that low-income veterans should be given preference for vacancies in the low-rent projects.

The bill also stipulates that private enterprise should be asked to "do as much of the total housing job as possible."

Some Nations Due to Require Aid After 1952

Certain European countries may need American aid even after the Marshall Plan ends in 1952, a high official of the Economic Cooperation Administration said yesterday.

"Not every country will have balanced its trade and made itself self-sustaining within four years," Deputy Assistant Administrator Richard M. Bissell, jr., told a press conference. Bissell cited Greece as one example, and said there might be others.

But he expressed the emphatic opinion that the Marshall Plan as a whole would come to its scheduled end in 1952, despite the dollar shortages still likely in some countries at that time.

Sale of Products a Problem

Bissell was commenting on the four-year recovery program released in Paris on Tuesday by the 19-nation organization for European Economic Cooperation. This program estimated that western Europe's dollar deficit might be as big as three billion dollars in 1953 unless drastic steps were taken meanwhile to cut imports and find foreign markets for European exports.

The search for markets would be one of Europe's major economic problems in the years immediately ahead, Bissell said, emphasizing that the size of the prospective deficit was in no sense a final figure.

Lauds Europe's Plans

Bissell said western Europe's work of joint economic planning for the four-year Marshall plan period "is moving ahead as fast and as well as it can." He praised the European governments for accompanying their estimates with realistic action to make their countries more completely self-sustaining.

"The planning they have done corresponds in general to our hopes and desires," said Bissell, recalling that the four-year study was started at ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman's request last summer.

9 Congressmen Get Short-Space Deal

Nine new Congressmen are crowded into makeshift office space in the House Office Building today, waiting helplessly until appointment of committee chairmen will make space available to them.

Representative Charles E. Nelson (R., Me.) described his present quarters as a "high-vaulted dog kennel, and a triangular one at that."

The Congressmen have only one room instead of the usual two-room suite; they share their one room with the three members of their staffs. In some instances, files have overflowed into corridors and conference rooms.

Lame Ducks Gone

Suitable office space is not available for them at this time because the chairmen of all the committees have not yet been named. The lame ducks have departed.

Since the suites adjoining committee headquarters are reserved for committee chairmen, these suites are vacant today. When the chairmen are appointed, these suites will be filled, and the nine Congressmen will move into their permanent quarters.

In addition, some Congressmen are scheduled to move into office space in the Capitol. When they do, their quarters in the House Office Building will also become available.

The reshuffling job will be completed within two weeks according to best estimates.

Congressmen Chester C. Gorski and Anthony F. Tauriello, both Democrats from Buffalo, N. Y., are sharing two rooms with the Harness Committee, which was investigating the Federal Communications Commission.

'Style Is Cramped'

Representative M. G. Burnside (D., W. Va.) shares space with the House District Committee. "Our style is cramped," one member of his four-man staff said yesterday.

One room in the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee suite is occupied today by Representative Pat Sutton (D., Tenn.). Four staff members and the Congressman occupy the space.

Representative Leonard Irving (D., Mo.) admits that he was late in filing for space but says his one room is "not bad," and larger than most of the other one-room setups.

Democrat Earl Chudoff of Pennsylvania is bothered by the lack of privacy, but figures he will have permanent quarters before too long.

Representatives Eugene D. O'Sullivan (D., Nebr.) and Edwin E. Willis (D., La.) complete the list of cramped Congressmen.

Chief Clerk At Annapolis

F. BYRNE AUSTIN,
of Takoma Park, Md., Democratic nominee for the Sixth Congressional seat in November's election, was selected chief clerk of the House of Delegates yesterday at Annapolis, Md. He was named to fill the place being vacated by Jack Menton of Baltimore for Congress from the Sixth Maryland District last November, but was defeated by Representative J. Glenn Beall. He is assistant general manager of the Capitol Motor Co., Inc., of Silver Spring.

Austin's appointment came as a surprise following a conference between E. Brooke Lee, Montgomery County Democratic leader, and other Democratic wheel horses in the State organization, and Gov. W. Preston Lane.

Wilkinson Speaker Pro Tem

Delegate Perry O. Wilkinson (D., Prince Georges) served as speaker pro tem for the House until Speaker Sybert was elected. Austin and other House officers were installed immediately following Sybert's assumption of the rostrum.

Meanwhile, it was generally conceded that Leroy Pumphrey (D., Prince Georges) would be retained as majority leader of the House. Failure of Baltimore factions to agree made it almost certain that Pumphrey would be named chairman of the House ways and means committee, which carries with it the floor leadership.

Republicans nominated Senator Robert B. Kimble of Allegany County for presidency of the Senate and Delegate Jacob R. Ramsburg of Frederick County for speaker of the House, a futile gesture except that the nomination in effect designates the two minority leaders of their respective houses.

An effort to nominate R. Duncan Clark, Montgomery County Republican, was defeated in the Republican caucus.

Majority Leader L. Harold Sotheron of Prince Georges was certain to retain his post.

Prince Georges Debt Bill

Prince Georges County's delegation today is expected to introduce a bill to provide for increasing the ceiling on indebtedness for county special improvement districts, Perry O. Wilkinson, chairman of the delegation, said tonight.

The bill will increase the ceiling to $1,200,000 instead of the present $800,000 limit. Special improvement districts are set up at the request of 51 per cent of the residents of a community to provide for local improvements, which are paid for by a local tax on the district.

Carole Highlands had expected to receive approval from the Prince Georges County commissioners last week for street and drainage improvements only to be held up as bids were opened by the discovery that the special improvements ceiling had almost been reached.

The Charles County's delegation is expected to introduce a bill which would permit a referendum by its citizens on the question of permitting operation of slot machines and similar devices in the county, State Senator James B. Monroe (Republican) said.

Montgomery Group to Wait

Montgomery County's delegation, all Republicans, plan to withhold filing of any bills until next week, delegation leader R. Anders Lofstrand said. The delegation will confer with the county council elected tomorrow in the county on legislative needs.

Arriving in a spick and span Statehouse—just emerging from a $565,000 beauty treatment—rank and file members of both houses stood for hours in corridors before the session officially opened.

The Governor's reception room became the most popular place in the Statehouse just before the session opened.

Among those who saw the Governor were Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro of Baltimore, James H. (Jack) Pollack, Baltimore Fourth District leader; Brooke Lee, Montgomery County leader; Neil McArdell, Baltimore City cmoptroller, and Vincent Palmisano, former Third District congressman.

Capitol-Bound With a Message

Congress Cool To Tax Boost

Truman was prescribing, and there was going to be a lot of gagging in Congress. However, there was one reassuring thought: Harold Knutson, Republican author of the tax-reduction bill that was passed over the President's veto in the last Congress, was defeated in November—an indication that voters do sometimes shoot Santa Claus.

The Chief Executive left the White House for the Capitol yesterday at 12:45 p. m. He was wearing a dark gray suit and black-and-white tie. With him was Mrs. Truman and their daughter, Margaret. The First Lady wore a black outfit with a fur jacket and a hat trimmed in white. Miss Truman had on a black cloth coat, a fur stole and a black hat with a long, tan feather.

It was a few minutes before 1 p. m. when William M. (Fishbait) Miller, House doorkeeper, cried out: "Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States."

Republicans Join in Applause

As Mr. Truman, jaunty and smiling, walked down the aisle, the whole assemblage arose. Handclapping and cries of "H'ray" sounded in the chamber. The applause, which came from both Republicans and Democrats, continued until the President had reached the dais and Speaker Rayburn had rapped his gavel for order.

"I have the honor of presenting the President of the United States," said Rayburn a moment later, and there was a fresh outburst of applause.

Mr. Truman's first utterance—"I am happy to report . . . that the state of the Union is good"—evoked handclapping. Altogether he was interrupted seven times before he turned the first page of his manuscript.

Contrast to Last Year

This was more applause than he got for his whole oration when he had appeared before the Republican-dominated Eightieth Congress a year before. On that occasion, somebody in the Press Gallery remarked that it was necessary to "chip a hole in the ice" to get Mr. Truman out of the chamber. He was regarded then, of course, as a political dead duck.

Nearly everybody agreed yesterday that the President had acquired a new air of confidence.

The biggest change, however, had come over the Senators and Representatives who were sitting there listening to him, including the old-timers. They had always liked him, even when his political fortunes were at their lowest. But yesterday there was something new in their attitude—greater respect, perhaps—certainly a greater attentiveness.

Sincerity Gets Response

The Republicans didn't like what he had to say about the Taft-Hartley law, and some of the Southern Democrats gagged on what he had to say about civil rights.

There came a point in his address, however, where all elements responded to his sincerity. He was nearing the end when he looked up from his manuscript, and began to talk in off-the-cuff fashion.

His voice took on warmth and he began to gesture with his arms.

He recalled how he had first appeared before Congress as President on April 16, 1945. He recalled how he quoted King Solomon's prayer for wisdom and ability to govern his people.

Begs Cooperation Again

"I explained to you at that time," Mr. Truman said, "that the task before me was one of the greatest in the history of the world and that it was necessary to have the complete cooperation of the Congress and the people of the United States.

"Well, now, we are taking a new start at the same situation. It is absolutely essential that your President have the complete cooperation of the Congress to carry out the great work that must be done to keep the peace in this world and to keep this country prosperous."

They liked that from-the-heart interpolation—the Republicans as well as the Democrats.

Float Backing By Suffrage Group Voted

The Board of Trustees of Central Suffrage Conference last night voted to underwrite the proposed District float in the inaugural parade to the extent of $100 at its meeting at 700 Jackson pl. nw.

The group appointed a committee to solicit funds for this purpose and also toward a fund to be used to publicize the District's voteless condition during the inaugural period.

Appointed to this committee by President Wilbur S. Finch were Mrs. Marshall Hornblower, chairman; Jesse B. Manbeck and Woolsey W. Hall. Contributions to the fund may be sent to "D. C. Float and Inaugural Publicity Fund" at Room 1054, National Press Building.

Gerhard van Arkel, chairman of the legislative committee of the Inaugural Committee and member of the Democratic Central Committee, described the evolution of the proposed float that is being sponsored by the Democratic Central Committee, Home Rule Committee, Truman-Barkley Club and the Suffrage Conference.

As planned, the float will be drawn by a jeep bearing a ballot box, chained and padlocked to illustrate the lack of suffrage, he said. The float proper will consist of a replica of the White House portico, a figure of "Miss Columbia," and a model of the rear of the Truman presidential train.

Three subcommittee chairmen within the Conference Policy Committee were appointed by Finch. They are Charles J. Pierce, information and research; Mrs. Frances Adams, congressional support, and Dr. Benjamin Striner, community support.

Truman's Balcony Is Featured on New $20 Bills

New York, Jan. 5 (NYHT).—Although it is not currently occupied by President Truman, the White House is attracting a bit of strictly monetary notice. The Federal Reserve Bank of New York reminded member banks and others today that $20 notes are appearing in circulation with a new engraving of the White House on the reverse side. This shows the building from the south, as it is now with the new balcony and four chimneys.

The engraving on the older $20 bills dates back to 1929, when there were only two chimneys and when Mr. Truman presumably had no designs on or for the White House. The grounds on the new bill are of a deeper green owing to the currently heavier foliage, and the lettering beneath the building has been changed to "The White House" from "White House."

The bank explains that inquiries now are being received as to the genuineness of the new notes.

Text of Truman's State-of-the-Union Address

Following is the text of President Truman's "State of the Union" message to Congress:

Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, members of the Congress:

I AM happy to report to this Eighty-first Congress that the state of the Union is good. Our Nation is better able than ever before to meet the needs of the American people, and to give them their fair chance in the pursuit of happiness. It is foremost among the nations of the world in the search for peace.

During the last 16 years, the American people have been creating a society which offers new opportunities for every man to enjoy his share of the satisfactions of life.

In this society, we are conservative about the values and principles which we cherish; but we are forward-looking in protecting those values and principles and in extending their benefits. We have rejected the discredited theory that the fortunes of the Nation should be in the hands of a privileged few. We have abandoned the "trickle-down" concept of national prosperity. Instead, we believe that our economic system should rest on a democratic foundation and that wealth should be created for the benefit of all.

The recent election shows that the American people are in favor of this kind of society and want to go on improving it.

The American people have decided that poverty is just as wasteful and just as unnecessary as preventable disease. We have pledged our common resources to help one another in the hazards and struggles of individual life. We believe that no unfair prejudice or artificial distinction should bar any American from an education, or from good health, or from a job that he is capable of performing.

The attainment of this kind of society demands the best efforts of every citizen in every walk of life, and it imposes increasing responsibilities on the Government.

THE Government must work with industry, labor and the farmers in keeping our economy running at full speed. The Government must see that every American has a chance to obtain his fair share of our increasing abundance. These responsibilities go hand in hand.

We cannot maintain prosperity unless we have a fair distribution of opportunity and a widespread consumption of the products of our factories and farms.

Our Government has undertaken to meet these responsibilities.

We have made tremendous public investments in highways, hydroelectric power projects, soil conservation and reclamation. We have established a system of social security. We have enacted laws protecting the rights and the welfare of our working people and the income of our farmers. These Federal policies have paid for themselves many times over. They have strengthened the material foundations of our democratic ideals. Without them, our present prosperity would be impossible.

Reinforced by these policies, our private enterprise system has reached new heights of production. Since the boom year of 1929, while our population has increased by only 20 per cent, our agricultural production has increased by 45 per cent, and our industrial production has increased by 75 per cent. We are turning out far more goods and more wealth per worker than we have ever done before.

This progress has confounded the gloomy prophets—at home and abroad—who predicted the downfall of American capitalism. The American people, going their own way, confident in their own powers, have achieved the greatest prosperity the world has ever seen.

BUT, great as our progress has been, we still have a long way to go. As we look around the country, many of our shortcomings stand out in bold relief.

We are suffering from excessively high prices.

Our production is still not large enough to satisfy our demands.

Our minimum wages are far too low.

Small business is losing ground to growing monopoly.

Our farmers still face an uncertain future. And too many of them lack the benefits of our modern civilization.

Some of our natural resources are still being wasted.

We are acutely short of electric power, although the means for developing such power are abundant.

Five million families are still living in slums and firetraps. Three million families share their homes with others.

Our health is far behind the progress of medical science. Proper medical care is so expensive that it is out of reach of the great majority of our citizens.

Our schools, in many localities, are utterly inadequate.

Our democratic ideals are often thwarted by prejudice and intolerance.

Each of these shortcomings is also an opportunity—an opportunity for the Congress and the President to work for the good of the people.

Our first great opportunity is to protect our economy against the evils of "boom and bust."

This objective cannot be attained by Government alone. Indeed, the greater part of the task must be performed by individual efforts under our system of free enterprise. We can keep our present prosperity, and increase it only if free enterprise and free government work together to that end.

We cannot afford to float along carelessly on a postwar boom until it collapses. And it is not enough merely to prepare to weather a recession if it comes. Instead Government and business must work together constantly to achieve more and more jobs and more and more production—which mean more and more prosperity for all the people.

The business cycle is man-made, and men of good will, working together, can smooth it out.

SO far as business is concerned, it should plan for steady, vigorous expansion—seeking always to increase its output, lower its prices, and avoid the vices of monopoly and restriction. So long as business does this, it will be contributing to continued prosperity, and it will have the help and encouragement of the Government.

The Employment Act of 1946 pledges the Government to use all its resources to promote maximum employment, production, and purchasing power. This means that the Government is firmly committed to protect business and the people against the dangers of recession and against the evils of inflation. This means that the Government must adapt its plans and policies to meet changing circumstances.

At the present time, our prosperity is threatened by inflationary pressures at a number of critical points in the economy. The Government must be in a position to take effective action at these danger spots. To that end, I recommend that the Congress enact legislation for the following purposes:

FIRST, to continue the power to control consumer credit and enlarge the power to control bank credit.

SECOND, to grant authority to regulate speculation on the commodity exchanges.

THIRD, to continue export control authority and to provide adequate machinery for its enforcement.

FOURTH, to continue the priorities and allocation authority in the field of transportation.

FIFTH, to authorize priorities and allocations for key materials in short supply.

SIXTH, to extend and strengthen rent control.

SEVENTH, to provide standby authority to impose price ceilings for scarce commodities which basically affect essential industrial production or the cost of living, and to limit unjustified wage adjustments which would force a break in an established price ceiling.

EIGHTH, to authorize an immediate study of the adequacy of production facilities for materials in critically short supply, such as steel; and, if found necessary, to authorize Government loans for the expansion of production facilities to relieve such shortages, and furthermore to authorize the construction of such facilities directly if action by private industry fails to meet our needs.

The economic report, which I shall submit to the Congress shortly, will discuss in detail the economic background for these recommendations.

ONE OF THE most important factors in maintaining prosperity is the Government's fiscal policy. At this time, it is essential not only that the Federal budget be balanced, but also that there be a substantial surplus to reduce inflationary pressures, and permit a sizable reduction in the national debt, which now stands at $252 billion. I recommend, therefore, that the Congress enact new tax legislation to bring in an additional four billion dollars of Government revenue. This should come principally from additional corporate taxes. A portion should come from revised estate and gift taxes. Consideration should be given to raising personal income tax rates in the middle and upper brackets.

If we want to keep our economy running in high gear, we must be sure that every group has the incentive to make its full contribution to the national welfare. At present the working men and women of the Nation are unfairly discriminated against by a statute that abridges their rights, curtails their constructive efforts, and hampers our system of free collective bargaining. That statute is the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947, sometimes called the Taft-Hartley Act.

That act should be repealed.

The Wagner Act should be reenacted. However, certain improvements, which I recommended to the Congress two years ago, are needed. Jurisdictional strikes and unjustifiable secondary boycotts should be prohibited. The use of economic force to decide issues arising out of the interpretation of existing contracts should be prevented. Without endangering our democratic freedoms, means should be provided for settling or preventing strikes in vital industries which affect the public interest.

The Department of Labor should be rebuilt and strengthened and those units properly belonging within that department should be placed in it.

The health of our economy and its maintenance at high levels further require that the minimum wage fixed by law should be raised to at least 75 cents an hour.

If our free enterprise economy is to be strong and healthy, we must reinvigorate the forces of competition. We must assure small business the freedom and opportunity to grow and prosper. To this purpose, we should strengthen our antitrust laws by closing those loopholes that permit monopolistic mergers and consolidations.

OUR national farm program should be improved — not only in the interest of the farmers, but for the lasting prosperity of the whole Nation. Our goals should be abundant farm production and parity of income for agriculture. Standards of living on the farm should be just as good as anywhere else.

Farm price supports are an essential part of our program to achieve these ends. Price supports should be used to prevent farm price declines which are out of line with general price levels, to facilitate adjustments in production to consumer demands, and to promote good land use. Our price support legislation must be adapted to these objectives. The authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide adequate storage space for crops should be restored.

Our program for farm prosperity should also seek to expand the domestic market for agricultural products, particularly among low income groups, and to increase and stabilize foreign markets.

We should give special attention to extending modern conveniences and services to our farms. Rural electrification should be pushed forward. And in considering legislation relating to housing, education, health, and social security, special attention should be given to rural problems.

Our growing population and the expansion of our economy depend upon the wise management of our land, water, forest and mineral wealth. In our present dynamic economy, the task of conservation is not to lock up our resources but to develop and improve them. Failure, today, to make the investments which are necessary to support our progress in the future would be false economy.

We must push forward with the development of our rivers for power, irrigation, navigation, and flood control. We should apply the lessons of our Tennessee Valley experience to our other great river basins.

I again recommend that action be taken by the Congress to approve the St. Lawrence Seaway and power project.

We must adopt a program for the planned use of the petroleum reserves under the sea, which are —and must remain—vested in the Federal Government. We must extend our programs of soil conservation. We must place our forests on a sustained yield basis, and encourage the development of new sources of vital minerals.

In all this we must make sure that the benefits of these public undertakings are directly available to the people. Public power should be carried to consuming areas by public transmission lines where necessary to provide electricity at the lowest possible rates, irrigation waters should serve family farms and not land speculators.

THE Government has still other opportunities—to help raise the standard of living of our citizens. These opportunities lie in the fields of social security, health, education, housing and civil rights.

The present coverage of the social security laws is altogether inadequate, and benefit payments are too low. One third of our workers are not covered. Those who receive old age and survivors insurance benefits receive an average payment of only $25 a month. Many others who cannot work because they are physically disabled are left to the mercy of charity. We should expand our social security program, both as to size of benefits and extent of coverage, against the economic hazards due to unemployment, old age, sickness and disability.

We must spare no effort to raise the general level of health in this country. In a Nation as rich as ours, it is a shocking fact that tens of millions lack adequate medical care. We are short of doctors, hospitals and nurses. We must remedy these shortages. Moreover, we need—and we must have without further delay—a system of prepaid medical insurance which will enable every American to afford good medical care.

It is equally shocking that millions of our children are not receiving a good education. Millions of them are in overcrowded, obsolete buildings. We are short of teachers, because teachers' salaries are too low to attract new teachers or to hold the ones we have. All these school problems will become much more acute as a result of the tremendous increase in the enrollment in our elementary schools in the next few years. I cannot repeat too strongly my desire for prompt Federal financial aid to the States to help them operate and maintain their school systems.

The governmental agency which now administers the programs of health, education and social security should be given full departmental status.

THE housing shortage continues to be acute. As an immediate step, the Congress should enact the provisions for low-rent public housing, slum clearance, farm housing, and housing research which I have repeatedly recommended. The number of low-rent public housing units provided for in the legislation should be increased to one million units in the next seven years. Even this number of units will not begin to meet our need for new housing.

Most of the houses we need will have to be built by private enterprise, without public subsidy. By producing too few rental units and too large a proportion of high-priced houses, the building industry is rapidly pricing itself out of the market. Building costs must be lowered.

The Government is now engaged in a campaign to induce all segments of the building industry to concentrate on the production of lower priced housing. Additional legislation to encourage such housing will be submitted.

The authority which I have requested, to allocate materials in short supply and to impose price ceilings on such materials, could be used, if found necessary, to channel more materials into homes large enough for family life at prices which wage earners can afford.

THE driving force behind our progress is our faith in our democratic institutions. That faith is embodied in the promise of equal rights and equal opportunities which the founders of our Republic proclaimed to their countrymen and to the whole world.

The fulfillment of this promise is among the highest purposes of government. The civil rights proposals I made to the Eightieth Congress, I now repeat to the Eighty-first Congress. They should be enacted in order that the Federal Government may assume the leadership and discharge the obligations clearly placed upon it by the Constitution.

I stand squarely behind these proposals.

Our domestic programs are the foundation of our foreign policy. The world today looks to us for leadership because we have so largely realized, within our borders, those benefits of democracy for which most of the peoples of the world are yearning.

We are following a foreign policy which is the outward expression of the democratic faith we profess. We are doing what we can to encourage free states and free peoples throughout the world to aid the suffering and afflicted in foreign lands and to strengthen democratic nations against aggression.

The heart of our foreign policy is peace. We are supporting a world organization to keep peace and a world economic policy to create prosperity for mankind. Our guiding star is the principle of international cooperation. To this concept we have made a national commitment as profound as anything in history.

To it we have pledged our resources and our honor.

UNTIL a system of world security is established upon which we can safely rely, we cannot escape the burden of creating and maintaining armed forces sufficient to deter aggression. We have made great progress in the last year in the effective organization of our armed forces, but further improvements in our national security legislation are necessary. Universal training is essential to the security of the United States.

During the course of this session I shall have occasion to ask the Congress to consider several measures in the field of foreign policy. At this time, I recommend that we restore the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act to full effectiveness and extend it for three years. We should also open our doors to displaced persons without unfair discrimination.

It should be clear by now to all nations that we are not seeking to freeze the status quo. We have no intention of preserving the injustices of the past. We welcome the constructive efforts being made by many nations to achieve a better life for their citizens. In the European Recovery Program, in our Good Neighbor Policy and in the United Nations we have begun to batter down those national walls which block the economic growth and the social advancement of the peoples of the world.

We believe that if we hold resolutely to this course, the principle of international cooperation will eventually command the approval even of those nations which are now seeking to weaken or subvert it.

We stand at the opening of an era which can mean either great achievement or terrible catastrophe for ourselves and all mankind.

THE STRENGTH of our Nation must continue to be used in the interest of all our people rather than a privileged few. It must continue to be used unselfishly in the struggle for world peace and the betterment of mankind the world over.

This is the task before us.

It is not an easy one. It has many complications, and there will be strong opposition from selfish interests.

I hope for cooperation from farmers, from labor and from business. Every segment of our population and every individual have a right to expect from our Government a fair deal.

In 1945, when I came up before the Congress for the first time April 16, I quoted to you King Solomon's prayer that he wanted wisdom and ability to govern his people as they should be governed. I explained to you at that time that the task before me was one of the greatest in the history of the world, and that it was necessary to have the complete cooperation of the Congress and the people of the United States.

Well now, we are taking a new start at the same situation. It is absolutely essential that your President have the complete cooperation of the Congress to carry out the great work that must be done to keep the peace in this world and to keep this country prosperous."

The people have a right to expect that the Congress and the President will work in the closest cooperation with one objective—the welfare of the people of this Nation as a whole.

In the months ahead I know that I shall be able to cooperate with this Congress.

I am confident that the divine power which has guided us to this time of fateful responsibility and glorious opportunity will not desert us now.

With that help from Almighty God which we have humbly acknowledged at every turning point in our national life, we shall be able to perform the great tasks which he now sets before us.

Truman Asks Four Billions More in Taxes

panded Federal program in education, health and housing, left high and dry in the Eightieth Congress, were right back on the doorstep of the now friendly Eighty-first. In fact, he stepped up his housing recommendations to ask construction of one million more low-rent public housing units in the next seven years.

Lower-Cost Housing Asked

Saying the building industry is rapidly pricing itself out of the market," he called for reductions in building costs and concentration of private builders on lower-cost housing. He said he may use proposed allocations authority to channel materials into homes wage earners can afford.

He failed to spell out his tax proposals in the specific terms he sent to Congress a year ago. Then he suggested a $40 per person income tax cut to be made up by an excess profits tax on corporations.

Yesterday he specified only the amount—four billion in new revenue, to balance the budget and provide a substantial surplus to reduce the 252 billion dollar national debt.

"This should come principally from additional corporate taxes," he said. 'A portion should come from revised estate and gift taxes. Consideration should be given to raising personal income tax rates in the middle and upper brackets."

Within that broad format, he left it to the reluctant House Ways and Means and Senate Finance Committees to write their own tax slate.

Anti-Inflation Points

Put up to the new Congress, too, were the President's familiar seven anti-inflation points, including standby authority to impose price ceilings for scarce commodities and to limit "unjustified" wage adjustments.

The surprise came in his eighth point. Mr. Truman asked authority to make an immediate study to determine the adequacy of production facilities for materials in short supply, "such as steel." If the survey showed it necessary, he said the Government should make loans for expansion of plant facilities to relieve such shortages. He proposed the Government construct such facilities "directly" if the private industry fails to meet production needs of the country.

It was on this new proposal that many GOP critics centered their cry of "socialism."

Mr. Truman told Congress national prosperity is still threatened at critical points and asked Congress for standby authority to ease pressure at these "danger spots."

Truman Points Presented

Then, in staccato fashion, he presented all of the famed "Truman points" that he pounded home at every whistle stop across the country.

LABOR—Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, and reenactment of the Wagner Act with "certain improvements." He again asked a ban on jurisdictional strikes and "unjustifiable" secondary boycotts, opposed "use of economic force" where there are conflicting interpretations of contracts, and asked better methods of averting strikes in vital industries that affect the public interest. Renewed also his call for a 75-cent-an-hour minimum wage and a "rebuilt and strengthened" Labor Department.

FARM—Set goals of "abundant farm production and parity of income for agriculture," with farm price supports an essential part of the program. Renewed CCC authority to provide adequate storage space for crops got one of his best hands. He asked rural electrification and farm service programs be pushed, and that special attention be given rural problems in housing, education, health and social security legislation.

RESOURCES—Development of river valleys, along the TVA model, for power, irrigation, navigation and flood control. Ratification of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project, the fifth time he has asked it. Federal retention and planned use of off-shore oil reserves. Extended soil conservation. Public transmission lines where necessary to deliver public power "at the lowest possible rates." Irrigation water for family farms "and not land speculators."

SOCIAL SECURITY AND HEALTH—Expansion of the program to "one third of our workers . . . not covered" and an increase in old age benefits above the present $25 monthly average. Better medical care, steps to increase the number of doctors, hospitals and nurses. He asked Congress to provide "without further delay" a system of prepaid medical insurance to "enable every American to afford good medical care."

AID TO EDUCATION—Prompt aid to the States to help them operate and maintain their school systems. He termed it "shocking" that millions of our children are not receiving a good education because buildings are obsolete and crowded and teachers salaries are too low to attract new teachers. With tremendous increases in elementary school enrollments, he said the problem will become much more acute in the next few years.

NEW DEPARTMENT—The Government agency administering health, education and social security programs should get full departmental status.

FOREIGN POLICY—Our "guiding star" is the principle of international cooperation, to which we have pledged "our resources and our honor." Later he will spell out several measures in this field. Yesterday he recommended only a three-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act and removal of "unfair discrimination" against admission of displaced persons.

Mr. Truman said it should be clear to all by now that we are not seeking to freeze the status quo.

"In the European Recovery Program, in our Good Neighbor Policy, and in the United Nations, we have begun to batter down those national walls which block the economic growth and the social advancement of the peoples of the world," he said.

In his sole indirect allusion to Russia, he added:

"We believe that if we hold resolutely to this course, the principle of international cooperation will eventually command the approval even of those nations which are now seeking to weaken or subvert it."

He said the world stands "at the opening of an era which can mean either great achievement or terrible catastrophe for ourselves and all mankind."

Theme Set Early

Mr. Truman opened his message by reporting that the state of the Nation is "good." Then, in three lines, he set the theme that re-echoed throughout his speech:

"We have rejected the discredited theory that the fortunes of the Nation should be in the hands of a privileged few.

"We have abandoned the 'trickle down' concept of national prosperity.

"Instead, we believe that our economic system should rest on a democratic foundation and that wealth should be created for the benefit of all."

D. C. Suffrage Plea Seen in Message

Senator J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.) last night interpreted President Truman's mesage to Congress as another direct plea for Washington home rule.

In a move to spike speculation that the President had slighted the local suffrage drive by failing to mention specifically District voting rights, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee told The Washington Post:

"It is definitely in there, and I do not see how the President's traditional stand for extending suffrage to District residents can be misinterpreted."

McGrath said Mr. Truman's "wholehearted" support to the local suffrage cause is contained in the paragraph of his state of the Union message which reads: "The civil rights proposals I made to the Eightieth Congress, I now repeat to the Eighty-first Congress. They should be enacted in order that the Federal Government may assume the leadership and discharge the obligations clearly placed upon it by the Constitution."

McGrath, who was selected yesterday to head the Senate District Committee, pointed out that point 7 of the above civil rights proposals to Congress last February 3 urged both home rule for District residents and their right to vote in presidential elections.

"The President had only 30 minutes to cover everything," said McGrath, "and it was virtually impossible for him to reiterate every detail of every field he had to discuss."

The question of home rule for Washington also was omitted from the President's State of the Union message a year ago. At a subsequent press conference Mr. Truman explained that the question was not put into his message because it did not belong there. He made clear, however, that he was still for Washington home rule.

The specific stand of the President on District voting privileges, as included in his 10-point civil rights message, was expressed in the following language:

"I am in full accord with the principle of local self-government for residents of the District of Columbia. In addition, I believe that the Constitution should be amended to extend suffrage in presidential elections to the residents of the District.

"The District of Columbia should be a true symbol of American freedom and democracy for our own people, and for the people of the world," the President stated. "It is my earnest hope that the Congress will give the citizens of the District of Columbia their own local, elective government.

"They themselves can then deal with the inequalities arising from segregation in the schools and other public facilities, and from racial barriers to places of public accommodation which now exists for one third of the District's population.

"The present inequalities in essential services are primarily a problem for the District itself, but they are also of great concern to the whole Nation. Failing local corrective action in the near future, the Congress should enact a model civil rights law for the Nation's Capital."

The President's appeal did not touch on the idea of giving the District representation in Congress, a major element of civic recommendations for national suffrage here.

As the new drive for home rule got under way in the Eighty-first Congress, Senator Pat McCarran (D., Nev.) yesterday introduced his bill to establish a Federal City Charter Commission. His legislation calls for an 11-member commission of civic leaders to draft a home-rule plan for later submission to Congress. The bill was referred to the Senate District Committee.

Transcript of Talk Given by J. Russell Young At Trade Board Dinner to New Congressmen

Following is a transcript of the talk made Tuesday night by John Russell Young, president of the Board of District Commissioners, at the Board of Trade dinner at the Shoreham Hotel given to honor new members of Congress. (The speech was recorded by Radio Station WTOP. Material in parentheses has been inserted.)

President Chatelain (of the Board of Trade), distinguished guests and gentlemen, the Board of Trade, and our many honored guests tonight:

Ah, I must say I really was surprised. I didn't know I was even going to make a talk tonight. I wondered how I had this very honored seat next to the Honorable Joseph O'Mahoney (Democratic Senator from Wyoming).

But I do want to say this to our new members of Congress who have come here tonight—a lot of men from all over the United States. Young men—I just met one of them; he is almost as old as my, ah, grandson (laughter).

We have a lot of new members, but being an old resident of Washington, and being a member of the Board of Trade myself—I might say, dues-paying member (laughter)—why I pay, I don't know. Why I should pay dues—I have been invited to every party here as an honored guest, and yet I pay dues. I don't know why (laughter).

But to you members of Congress, all over the room—I don't know who they are all—gentlemen, I want to say this: you have come to, ah, not only a great city—you've just seen its picture—but, your duties are going to be very perplexing and unusual, because the city of Washington is a Federal city. It was organized, ah, as such, but we gentlemen, members of the Board of Trade and others of my own official capacity, must run the city as a municipality. And I hope you gentlemen here tonight will get the idea of what we are trying to convey to you—that we only want your support and help.

Realize that we people of Washington who have no vote, no say in our government, need the support of you gentlemen who have come here tonight and don't know anything in the world about Washington.

So many of you may be on our ah, District committees, make our laws for us. You are our councilmen, our city council—all of them.

Now, we run this city according to the laws and rules—and regulations which you gentlemen make. We try to run it well.

As Mr. Chatelain said that our form of government started way back in 187—(I think he said 74)—I think it's 1878. I won't argue with him about that (laughter).

But gentlemen, you have the city of Washington right in the palm of your hands. What you say, we must do. We have no say about it at all.

We try to run an honest city. And in my nine years as Commissioner—and 38 years as a newspaperman in Washington, I have never heard one breath of scandal about the city of Washington (applause).

It's an honest government. We have no politics, no graft. Oh, maybe some (laughter). Some police inspector may take a cigar, or some inspector — food inspector — may take a lunch or something; but we've got an honest city (laughter).

And, I hope you new Congressmen realize that the city of Washington is not only a municipality, but is the Capital of the world.

And you look at those pictures tonight. You saw those beautiful pictures—Mount Vernon, the Capitol, and the Monument. And I, since I've been Commissioner, I've tried to do everything in my power to make the people of Washington appreciate our city.

We have four newspapers, and I must say, ladies and gentlemen—and one of your great editors is sitting here tonight—if they would give the city the support they give the Board of Trade, we would have a great city (laughter). It's easy to ridicule, easy to make fun of (laughter). It's easy to needle, but I want to say, gentlemen—I may go out of office soon—but I want to say this, and I've had nine years of great experience. I came into the office with no executive experience in my life.

When I walked in my office for the first time, that was the first time in my life I had been in a room where nobody else was in it (laughter). I'd been used to working in a newsroom with everybody making noise. I was the loneliest man in the world.

So I noted that the first thing to do was to make friends with Congress (laughter). And I, I found that—that I had a little expense account (tittering); so I started going up the Hill.

And I made a lot of friends, like my good friend Joe O'Mahoney and Olin Johnston (Democratic Senator from South Carolina) and all my friends along here—Karl Stefan (Nebraska Republican Representative) and the rest of them. I don't see them, but I spent my time selling them Washington like you did on the screen tonight.

You gentlemen who just came here—hope I may have the opportunity to tell them more about Washington—what they saw tonight on the screen.

The Board of Trade is a big organization, seven or eight thousand members. And you members of Congress—I want you to listen to exactly what I say—seven or eight thousand members. Now that's a lot of members and they are a cross section of Washington. They are the best people of Washington. Business, citizens, professional men.

And when I went to Congress at first, eight or nine years ago, I found out some of these gentlemen here tonight. Let's see. Yes. Oren Harris (Democratic Representative from Arkansas) is here tonight. He was on my committee.

They didn't know much about Washington and I sort of told them. And I found out every two years, gentlemen, there's a new Congress elected. I had read it in the paper, but I did not realize it (laughter). So every two years, I had to go up to the Hill to educate the new men (laughter).

Of course I won't say this disrespectfully. John McMillan (Democrat of South Carolina, chairman of the House District committee) isn't here to share my opinion. Disrespectfully, I don't intend it that way, but I suspect, sometimes they put members on our committee—(when) they don't know where to put 'em (laughter). But that's no disrespect to the men on the committee. That's probably the, the, ah, the, ah, probably the, ah, custom of the, ah, House.

Every two years, I had to go up there, ah, and, I won't say I dug down in my pocket, because I made the District pay for it (laughter). But, anyhow, I had to take those new men and tell them all about it. Every two years.

We got new members on our committee. As I look along this table—Oren Harris and Karl Stefan, and, ah, old man Church (Representative Ralph E. Church, R., Ill.), down here. They're the old members, but every two years, gentlemen—and ol' George over here (Representative George J. Bates, R., Mass.)—we have to educate those gentlemen about Washington (laughter).

The Board of Trade did a great job in helping—that was a great help—and I think since about three or four years ago, the Board of Trade started a policy to really go out in a big way to teach—I won't say teach, I will say educate, that's, ah, a softer word—members of Congress about Washington.

And I have done everything I could. I have done everything I could, gentlemen. I have worked hard. Why, take this big handsome man here, Senator Johnston from South Carolina. I've done everything but hit him in the jaw (laughter) on the sales tax. Senator Johnston's a lovely fellow, and he's not going to fight so hard. He's going to fight. We are going out for our sales tax, gentlemen, because this town is broke (laughter).

We can't do anything. We can't do anything. Joe O'Mahoney was on our committee for three years—he knows our predicament, he knows our situation. We have raised every source of revenue we can.

Two years ago, we appointed a committee—the best citizens. I think Mr. Bob Fleming (president and chairman of the board of the Riggs National Bank) is here tonight. He was on the committee to explore every source of taxation they could get. I think Joe McGarraghy (Washington lawyer and former president of the Board of Trade) and Ben McKelway (editor of the Evening Star) was on it.

We had one of the finest committees in Washington—and our own department heads. And when we finished, we found out the only solution——We did pick up a few little things that didn't amount to much, maybe two or three million dollars (laughter). Ah, that may get a laugh, but gentlemen, gentlemen, that's peanuts—that's peanuts. So the only thing that would solve our financial problem was the sales tax, and I want to say this, and I don't want my old friend Olin Johnston to pat me on the back. I think he will at that. Patting won't even solve it. That's not even enough.

Gentlemen, we have a Capital city here today, and what do we want to do with this city. To say the Capital—it's not only the Capital of Washington; it's the Capital of the world.

We have great future ambitions, not only in our parks and recreations, but in our schools, streets and highways. We have a city that's going to cost money. And I don't think that any of you men in this room tonight—and you are mostly businessmen—want to see us lag behind in paying, or in increasing salaries of our employes, or policemen, firemen, or teachers.

We want to do that, too, but to do that, gentlemen, we have got to have money. And even if I do make that lip quiver of my good friend Olin Johnston, the only way we can do it, is the sales tax to start with. And I don't think that will even do it. (Applause.)

I talked to Olin the other day at the Senate, and he's such a nice—I mean he was so polite. He was awfully polite. He was so polite. I think he was running for re-election (laughter). I don't know. He kind of figured, he told me, he of course was going to fight it. But, ah, it kind of struck me, ah, that he's not going to fight it so hard. I don't know (laughter).

But, gentlemen, we've all got together, and regardless if we've hurt ol' Olin's feelings, I don't care. We've got to have more money to run Washington. It's a capital city.

Now Senator Johnston is really, ah, I will say, ah—I don't want to give you the wrong opinion—is really an honest and fine fellow. And he thinks, and I hope he's right—very honest about it—he thinks we can get a much larger Federal contribution (applause). As much as I love him, I hope he's right. We should have it.

I don't know many new members of Congress here tonight, but I'm going to say this for the benefit of the gentlemen here—I guess the old members of Congress knew it—but you gentlemen of Congress, I'll say this: something about our financial relationship with the Federal Government.

Now, just start with this—and Olin, here is something for you to put in your, ah, to get more money (laughter). Take the water bill—for water. Just for water for the water bill for the Federal Government.

If they paid what you and I paid for our houses, would be $950,000—now that's almost a million dollars. Now think that over.

That's just for water—for the Federal Government. Now get that. And we give free water to all these, ah, embassies, ah, and legations, ah, and people like that. If we could get our water bill—just one million dollars, Olin—if you can get that (laughter).

I won't kick on that at all (laughter). Just one million dollars.

Gentlemen, can I have a little attention? Just a minute, because I . . . only . . . I'll be finished. I'm talking just on matters, and I'm going to say this, and I feel sure that you new members of Congress, if you could realize our problem . . .

We have no vote, we have no say, you're our Congressmen, you're our aldermen (laughter), we pay the bills. And if some of you would only realize how few of us pay the bills—I think that Mr. Dent, our assessor, will correct me if I'm wrong, and George Bates knows it, he went through our figures, I think 49 per cent of our area today is taxable, 51 per cent is not taxable.

And there are very few people—ah, I don't think we have over 120,000 out of a 900,000 population—that pay the income tax. So gentlemen—you members of Congress—if you'll only take the trouble . . . I know you have your own domestic and your own problems to think of . . . if you'll just think of the District as your Capital.

Think of that—your capital—and think of our predicament. We have no voice in our government. We want to have a great city—something we can be proud of.

And when you gentlemen leave Washington, I hope you leave like the gentleman I went up to the Capitol to have luncheon to pay my respects. He had spent 30 years in Washington. Well, this gentleman went with the love of everyone in Washington.

That was Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas. Now, you gentlemen must show the same interest in Washington as Senator Capper did. He spent 30 years, and the people of Washington paid him great tribute, because it's your capital just as well as ours.

But we pay the bills, and you pay very little. So, I . . . (applause drowns out last of speech).

Corcoran Exhibit To Cover Century Of American Art

In answer to the controversy raised by its "Biennial of Contemporary Painting in 1947" exhibition, the Corcoran Gallery of Art will begin an 11-day exhibition Sunday of "American Paintings Illustrating a Century of Taste and Criticism."

Hermann W. Williams, jr., director of the gallery, announced yesterday the loan exhibition will be entitled "De Gustibus." Organized by Eleanor B. Swenson, associate curator of the gallery, it includes 59 paintings covering major issues in American painting between 1830 and 1930.

Among famous canvases borrowed from museums and private collections are Winslow Homer's "Fox Hunt," James A. M. Whistler's "White Girl," Eastman Johnson's "Old Kentucky Home," George Isness' "The Clouded Sun," Harnett's "Old Models," Stuart Davis' "Summer Landscape," and Marsdon Hartley's "Fisherman's Last Supper."

Montgomery Picks Charter Council Today

a charter leader since the move was started. He is a practicing attorney and twice successfully defended the charter in legal battles. A Bethesda resident, Lee is married, has four children, and is a charter committee director. He is a horticulturist.

Lewis Meriam, also an at-large candidate. A Democrat, Meriam is a Government consultant who holds two law degrees. He is slated soon for retirement from the Brookings Institution. He is a Harvard graduate, is married, has one daughter and lives in Kensington, Md. He has written several works on personnel administration and government, and directed the Brookings survey of Montgomery County, which gave rise to charter movement.

Three Independents

Three independents who, political veterans say, stand "an even chance" to score an upset are:

Charles K. Davies, jr., District No. 2. A Democrat, Davies is a Gaithersburg (where he lives) and Bethesda attorney. He is town attorney for Gaithersburg. Married, with three children, he is vice president of that town's fire department. He has lived in the county since 1927. He is an active charterite although he was not named to the charter slate. He opposes Augustus R. Selby.

Mrs. Alma T. Opal, an at large candidate. Also an active charterite, she is a resident of Takoma Park, where she is a civic leader. In 1946, she was defeated for Republican nomination to the House of Delegates. She is a member of the League of Women Voters, has studied the Montgomery County government and frequently attends sessions of the county commissioners.

Romeo W. Horad, District No. 5. Horad, a Negro and a Republican, claims to have backing from all county Negro groups. An overseas veteran of World War I, he was graduated from Howard University Law School and now is a Washington real estate broker. He is married, with three children, two of whom served overseas in World War II. He lives in Wheaton and opposes J. Douglas Bradshaw.

Veteran election observers are predicting a voter turnout of somewhere between 5000 and 10,000. There are 51,000 registered voters in the county.

McGrath Heads Senate District Committee

posed it in the past. Frear and Miller postponed comment.

The brighter picture for District suffrage hopes in the makeup of the new Senate District Committee Democratic majority is in contrast to the House District Committee which is expected to be headed by Representative John L. McMillan (D., S. C.), who has already served notice he does not favor continuing the Home Rule Subcommittee.

Week's Delay Expected

Speaker Rayburn said House committee assignments probably will not be made for about a week.

The Washington Post polled the Democrat members of the Senate District Committee for their views on two other subjects of vital concern to the District—a sales tax and salary increase for District employes.

Neely and Johnston said they are emphatically opposed to a sales tax in the District. There was no comment from the others, including McGrath who favored the sales tax measure in the last session of Congress.

McGrath, Neely, Kefauver, Hunt and Johnston said they favor a pay raise for District employes. Frear and Miller said they needed time to familiarize themselves with District problems before taking any stand.

Pleased by Honor

McGrath said he will "attempt to run the committee as though the people of the District have some voting rights. I am highly pleased by the honor conferred upon me as I have a deep and abiding interest in the problems of the District."

On the subject of suffrage, McGrath said:

"I favor the principles of the Auchincloss home-rule bill and will certainly push them as hard as I can."

Although he favored the sales tax last year, McGrath declined final comment on the proposal this time, until he has studied the District revenue situation.

"I certainly favor pay raises for District employes," he said, "in the interest of working out common justice."

Neely said, "I've made up my mind that I'm going to be for full franchise rights for District residents. It's in harmony with the thinking and spirit of the times."

On the sales tax, Neely declared, "I'm dead set against it. When I was Governor of my State I fought it vigorously. It makes the poorest man pay the same tax as the richest."

Neely, a member of the Senate District Committee in the 1920s, said he favors pay raises for District employes.

Kefauver, a former member of the House, said he feels he knows something about District problems from his previous experience in Congress.

District "Neglected"

"People of the District," he said, "have been neglected in many ways for quite a while. I am anxious to do what I can to help make Washington a model city. It is a good advertisement to other States and other countries."

On the subject of suffrage, Kefauver, who supported the Auchincloss home-rule bill in the Eightieth Congress and made a statement in the House supporting it, declared:

"I have always felt the people here should have the right to vote locally and nationally."

Kefauver said he is for the pay raise, but withheld comment on the sales tax until he has had time to study the situation. He predicted McGrath will make "an excellent chairman."

Hunt told The Washington Post:

"I asked for the District Committee assignment because I think every American should have a great interest in the Nation's Capital which is today the world capital."

On suffrage, Hunt declined to state specifically whether he believes it should be national, local or both, but added:

"I've never been in harmony with the thinking that a person should be denied the right to vote just because he lives in the District. If I had to lose the right to vote to become a Senator, I never would have run for the job."

"Great Money Raiser"

Hunt would not commit himself on the sales tax but said:

"The sales levy is a great money raiser, don't forget that. And experience has shown that resistance against it usually fades away when it has been in operation a short while."

Wyoming has a sales tax and Hunt said: "It's been a great source of revenue for us."

"If you want an efficient city government," said Hunt, when asked about the pay raise, "you have to pay them just as well as you can. I have certainly found that on the State level."

Hunt said he is joining the District Committee with "an open and, I hope, a fair mind."

Johnston was unavailable for comment, but last year he opposed suffrage and the sales tax while favoring a pay raise.

So stout was his opposition to the sales tax that when it was tied to a proposed pay raise for District employes as a means of financing the salary increase, Johnston filibustered the bill to death in the final night session of the Eightieth Congress.

Frear and Miller declined to comment on any of the subjects, declaring they must first study the local problems.

GOP Makeup Revised

There also will be a radical revision in the makeup of the Republican members of the Senate District Committee. Only one in seven, James P. Kem of Missouri, seems likely to return.

Missing because they were defeated for reelection are C. Douglass Buck of Delaware, chairman of the committee in the Eightieth Congress; Joseph H. Ball of Minnesota; John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky and Henry C. Dworshak of Idaho.

Arthur Capper of Kansas did not seek reelection, and Harry P. Cain of Washington, former chairman of the subcommittee on District fiscal affairs, has resigned from the Senate District Committee.

Also of local interest will be the Senator named to head the District Subcomittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee. Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), who held the post last year, has the senior claim on the job, but has not yet decided if he will accept it.

Two Others Declined

McGrath was named chairman of the Senate District Committee after two other Senators with more seniority had declined the post.

Johnston was in line for the job but preferred to accept the chairmanship of the Senate Postoffice and Civil Service Committee. Senator Spessard L. Holland (D., Fla.), a member of the District Committee last year and next in line for chairmanship, decided instead to take membership on two major committees, Agriculture and Public Works.

McGrath, 45, was elected Governor of Rhode Island in 1940 and reelected in 1942 and 1944. He resigned the governorship in 1945 to become Solicitor General of the United States. The following year he was elected to the Senate. He has been chairman of the Democratic National Committee since October, 1947.

Twice Governor of South Carolina, Johnston was elected to the Senate in 1944. He is 52.

Veteran Office Holder

Neely, 74, is a veteran office holder. He has served 16 years in the Senate, 10 years in the House and a term as Governor of West Virginia.

Kefauver was elected to the House in 1938 and four times reelected. He triumphed over the machine of Boss E. H. Crump of Memphis in his first bid for the Senate last November. He is 45.

Hunt served two terms as Governor of Wyoming before his election to the Senate last November.

Frear, who had never run for public office, is the Dover businessman who upset Senator C. Douglass Buck in Delaware in the last election.

Miller was serving on the Idaho Supreme Court bench when elected to the Senate over Senator Dworshak.

District Acts On By-passed Pay Increases

The District Commissioners yesterday directed Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West to draft legislation providing a $330 a year pay increase for District teachers, policemen and firemen.

The order followed a special meeting of the Commissioners on the salary question. The increase would be retroactive to last July, when Federal workers received the $330 pay boost.

The decision came after announcement by a subcommittee of the Senate Civil Service Committee approving a $330 retroactive salary increase for the District's 7598 classified employes. The teachers, policemen and firemen are not included in this increase.

The proposed bill affects an estimated 3500 teachers, 907 firemen and 1952 policemen, and would cost about $2,127,180. This amount, plus an estimated 2½ million for the classified workers' raise, comes within a million of the 5½ million estimated as necessary for the same boost to prevail for the District's 18,000 workers. Most of the million probably would be used to raise the pay of per diem workers.

Last year, when the Federal Government boosted salaries of full-time workers, a pro rata increase was granted to per diem workers. This policy is expected to be followed in the District government if the pay bill is enacted, District budget officials indicated.

A small saving on the total is anticipated through failure to fill all positions on the District employment rolls.

Truman to See Press

President Truman will hold his weekly news conference at 10:30 a. m. (EST) Friday, the White House announced yesterday.

Falls Church Annexation Survey Begun by 3 Experts

Three city planning experts yesterday moved into the Falls Church City Hall to survey the 7 square miles of adjoining Fairfax County land to determine the possibility of adding the territory to Falls Church.

The experts were Harlan Bartholomew of St. Louis, whose firm has been hired at $2500 to do the "preliminary" survey; his Eastern representative, Harry W. Alexander, and Dr. Thomas H. Reed, a Virginia annexation specialist being hired for several days on a day-by-day basis.

Two representatives of Bartholomew's firm have been at work for a week on the study.

Falls Church city officials said the first chore of the city planning experts will be to map out a definite Fairfax County area thought suitable for annexation.

If their preliminary survey shows annexation is feasible, the Falls Church City Council may elect to take its case to Fairfax Circuit Court for a showdown with the county, which already has indicated it will fight land-acquisition plans.

Clean D. C. Rivers 10 Years Off

from 500,900 people, without critically depleting its oxygen, and the District thus could treat sewage from 65,000 suburbanites, in addition to its own needs.

In 10 years, he said through filling in shallow areas of the river to "build" land, the Potomac has "lost its ability to absorb the pollution from 25,000 people," while the population increased beyond all expectation.

"Various estimates have indicated a metropolitan area population of about 1,500,000 by 1955 and 1,800,000 by 1980," he said.

"Since the river now will only assimilate the polution from 475,000 people, it is obvious that the area will have to remove 68 per cent of the pollution in 1955, and 73 per cent in 1980," and "our present degree of treatment must be more than doubled."

This will require the 10-year expenditure of six million dollars to expand the Blue Plains plant, said Kemp, and of this only $1,720,000 has been authorized so far.

The cost estimates, he said, do not include facilities to care for the discharge of ground garbage into the sewerage system through rapidly increasing use of "sink-type grinders." This procedure alone, which he predicted will eventually outmode carrying garbage through the streets, "means an ultimate extra load of 50 per cent on the sewage treatment plant."

Of the three other modern sewage treatment plants in the area, Kemp said, the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission plant at Bladensburg and the Arlington County plant at Four Mile Run, like the District plant have been overloaded and render "inadequate treatment."

The Federal plant, located in Virginia between Highway Bridge and Memorial Bridge, "renders adequate treatment," he said. Alexandria's sewage is dumped into the Potomac without treatment.

Arrangements have been made with the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission to pick up sewage at the District Line and carry it to Blue Plains, with the Sanitary Commission paying the cost, and eventually to discontinue the primary treatment plant at Bladensburg.

An intercepting sewer, said Kemp, should be built from the District Line to Great Falls, as the need develops, to carry sewage to Blue Plains.

Fairfax County, Arlington County and Alexandria, he said, "are now cooperating in making a study of pollution control."

"Not only must we remove raw pollution from the river," said Kemp, "but we must also not permit a treatment plant to be constructed along this reach" and discharge its residue into the river.

The winter meeting of the Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin will be held Friday and Saturday at the Mayflower Hotel to discuss pollution plans.

Fairfax Seeks Clarification Of '46 Sewage Disposal Law

Fairfax County supervisors yesterday voted to seek clarification of a Virginia sewage disposal law that threatens to halt much building in the county.

A five-man committee was appointed to ask the State Water Control Board if the county must obey the letter of the 1946 law, which prohibited from that time any addition to the volume of raw sewage discharged into the Potomac River.

Fairfax and other nearby communities have been violating the law ever since its adoption, because of housing needs and the inability immediately to provide treatment plants.

But last month the Fairfax supervisors put a 30-day ban on new sewer connections after being told by State officials such connections are in violation of the law and by the county's Commonwealth's attorney that they could be fined individually.

The action brought protests yesterday from builders who must have assurance of sewer facilities to get Federal Housing Authority approval of building plans.

Attorney Andrew W. Clarke, who represented several builders and was also a member of Legislature that passed the bill, argued that the State intended to give counties time to build treatment plants before enforcing the act.

James J. Corbalis, county sanitary engineer, said the county had received permission in 1947 to continue making sewer connections and that he had received no rescinding order.

The trouble began last month when the county asked the State board's approval of plans to connect Groveton sewers with the trunk sewer emptying into the Potomac. Permission to make the connection was denied, and the State then told Fairfax officials such connections are in violation of the 1946 law.

The committee appointed to ask the State board for an official ruling on how the law applies to Fairfax includes: Clarke, Corbalis, Supervisor Arthur I. Schaffer, Commonwealth's Attorney Hugh B. Marsh and Consulting Engineer G. Hubard Massey.

Troops to Stand By At Ruhr Razing

Duesseldorf, Germany, Jan. 5 (AP).—Britain may use troops to overcome German resistance to dismantling the big Bochumer Verein steel works in the Ruhr.

More than 100 Essen workers, aiding with the Bochum employes, refused today to begin razing the plant. It is situated in Bochum, 30 miles northeast of Duesseldorf.

Earlier this week a group of Bochum workers formed a human wall around a machine and turned back British officers and some Germans who had come to start the dismantling.

A high British official said another attempt will be made Monday.

"This time," he said, "there will be sufficient British troops standing by to insure that the job will start. If the Bochumer Verein workers start to interfere, we are prepared to take counter measures."

Franz-Josef Mueser, plant manager, said tonight he expects no active resistance by the workers if the British move in the troops because "my workers are very reasonable."

Plant officals said they will have to discharge a considerable number of workers after the dismantling. Bochumer Verein is one of the nation's largest steel mills.

22 Hungarians Escape Red 'Terror' by Air

Munich, Germany, Jan. 5 (AP).—A planeload of refugees made an aerial get-away from Hungary and said today they had fled from "Communist terror."

Twenty-two of those aboard a commandeered Hungarian National Airways Liner which made a surprise landing here last night were in the escape plot. Three others said they want to go back to Hungary.

"We fled from constant Communist terror," said Capt. Janos Majoros, the pilot.

A passenger telling of life in Hungary said:

"Every noise at night . . . the ring of a doorbell, gave you panicky fear. You never knew if it was not the police."

One refugee said that even persons who never belonged to any political party live in "constant" fear because Communists consider them "reactionary."

Majoros, a former Hungarian airline pilot, said he and confederates boarded the plane ostensibly as ordinary passengers on its regularly scheduled flight from Pecs in southern Hungary to Budapest.

Once in the air, he took over the controls as prearranged with its regular pilot, Capt. Milos Kuhn, and flew the ship across the border, he said. The navigator and mechanic learned of the plan after the take-off and agreed, Majoros said.

U. S. Club Ban On Berlin GIs Is Suspended

Berlin, Jan. 5 (AP).—Harmack House the biggest American club in Berlin, banned United States enlisted men but admitted German frauleins, and so the fight waxed hot today.

The GI won a temporary victory when the board of governors suspended the month-old ban until a special meeting Thursday has threshed it out again.

The dispute grows from the long-standing demand of United States Army officers for the right to relax where enlisted men can't watch them, and the enlisted man's contention that what's good enough for an officer is good enough for him.

At one point in this particular feud, an officer is alleged to have opposed admitting "enlisted barbarians." That just piled fuel on the fire.

The board of governors indorsed the ban on enlisted men last night by vote of 135 to 110, but the angry minority applied enough heat to have the decision reversed today, at least temporarily. The sign, "No Enlisted Men Allowed" was hastily taken down.

An old mansion houses the club near the military government headquarters. It is a plush spot, with a bar, dining rooms and lodging accommodations for important visitors.

Until a month ago its membership was open to all American Army officers and enlisted men and civilian employes at $2 a month. Then, at the officers' demand, the constitution was amended to bar the GI. Members still are permitted to invite German fraulein guests.

New Palestine Peace Action

formant expressed satisfaction yesterday over the American move to end the fighting.

At the same time, the spokesman said the whole situation around the Egyptian border "arises out of the most flagrant and deliberate violation" by Israel of Security Council directives.

The informant disclosed that a small British detachment has gone to the Red Sea port of Aqaba, in Trans-Jordan, adjoining territory allotted to Israel under the U. N. partition plan. Britain normally does not keep a garrison at Aqaba, but she has a mutual defense pact with Trans-Jordan, as with Egypt.

An Israeli spokesman in Tel Aviv charged last night that Britain not only had sent forces to Aqaba, but also planes to Mafrak in Trans-Jordan, and was holding landing exercises in Tripolitania against simulated Israeli targets.

British spokesmen refused comment on these latter charges.

A dispatch from Bagdad, Iraq, on fighting northeast of Tel Aviv, said Iraqi troops had taken "important positions in the battle of Tira."

The Iraqi communique said the Jews had suffered many killed and wounded in this fighting, while Iraqi casualties were listed as 41 killed and 9 wounded. It added that the battle of Kufish, just north of Qalqilye, Arab highway center on the road to Tulkarm, was continuing.

Cease-Fire Ordered by Dutch; 'Fight On,' Guerilla Chiefs Say

Batavia, Java, Jan. 5—(AP).—The Dutch ordered a cease-fire in all Indonesia today, but Republican guerillas said they would still fight.

An order of the day told Dutch troops to restrict their action in Sumatra to fighting "roaming groups, gangs or individuals who try to cause disorder." This was about the same language with which the Dutch had ordered a cease-fire on New Year's Eve in Java, the other section of the Republic of Indonesia.

In Australia, an Indonesian official spokesman, Dr. R. Usman, said the republic emergency government has instructed him to announce it will end guerilla fighting only after the Dutch have met conditions that clearly are unacceptable at this time to The Netherlands.

Usman said the fighting would end only after the Dutch have:

1. Released captive Indonesian leaders including Dr. Soekarno, president of the republic, and its premier, Dr. Mohamed Hatta.
2. Withdrawn from positions they have seized since December 19.
3. Recognized the republicans' sovereignty over Java, Sumatra and Madoera.
4. Allowed a sovereign all-Indonesian government to take over the republic by democratic means without Dutch interference.
5. Agreed to withdraw Dutch forces from Indonesia as soon as possible after the all-Indonesian government has been formed, with guarantees that Netherlands economic interests would be properly protected.

The Dutch cease-fire was issued by Lieut. Gen. Simon Spoor, commander in chief of the Dutch army.

Big Cigarette Deal Involves MPs Overseas

Munich, Germany, Jan. 5 (AP).—Two American military police have been convicted and two others arrested in what the United States Army describes as "the first major bribery case involving military personnel in the European theater."

Revelations by a pretty fraulein led to discovery of what an Army spokesman said yesterday "is believed to be a gigantic syndicate" importing American cigarettes into Germany illegally.

"The operation is so large that when we confiscate three or four truckloads of cigarettes no one claims them nor is any complaint received from those we believe to be at the top," the spokesman said.

The fraulein was identified as Yetta Winter, who "had accepted numerous expensive gifts of jewelry and clothing from her GI lover."

She boasted to other military police that her boy friend, Pfc. William E. Brown had netted approximately $40,000 in cigarette deals in little more than a year.

Brown is scheduled to go on trial soon in Austria with Sergt. Elmer K. Bogart on charges of offering a bribe. Both are MPs stationed at Salzburg, Austria.

Already convicted of accepting a bribe are Corpl. James C. Schneider and Pfc. Roscoe E. Stephens, military police stationed at Berchtesgaden, Hitler's old mountain retreat.

Over Blockade

W. German Reds Sever Soviet Tie

Berlin, Jan. 5—(NYHT)—West German Communists have severed their organizational relations with the Soviet occupation zone Communists in a move interpreted here today as an attempt to halt the recent steep decline in Communist popularity throughout the Western occupation zone.

Western observers pointed out that Communists in West Germany wished to separate themselves from Berlin headquarters because of the association of Berlin with the unpopular Soviet blockade tactics.

The resolution to cut organizational links said the "basic understanding between the Socialist Unity Party and the western Communist Party on the question of German politics wil continue. The fight for the unity of Germany will continue as will the right for self-determination for democratic freedom and for the unity of the workers."

The Communists have another worry—the effect on the Germans of the Western power note asking why the Soviets did not return the more than 200,000 prisoners due to be repatriated by January 1.

Lie of U. N. To 'Consider' Chinese War

Lake Success, N. Y., Jan. 5 (U.P.).—United Nations Secretary-General Trygve Lie said today he will "consider" what he can do to halt the Chinese war.

Lie promised to announce his decision within a week. His aides said it was possible he would decide the U. N. should not intervene.

Lie predicted that a Palestine peace settlement will be worked out in 1949.

He made these announcements:

1. The Security Council's Berlin currency committee, composed of six representatives of "neutral" countries and Swedish Economist Gunnar Myrdal, has submitted to the Big-Four a new formula for resolving the currency dispute. An American spokesman said the United States will give its comment on the proposal to the committee by January 10.

2. The Security Council will take up the Indonesian question Friday afternoon if all delegations are on hand.

3. The Security Council committee named to oversee the Negev cease-fire order for Palestine will meet here Friday morning.

4. The opening date for the second half of the General Assembly session has been postponed from Friday April 1 to Tuesday, April 5.

Slav Assails Soviet Critic

Belgrade, Jan. 5 (U.P.).—Russian Communists were told today they could benefit from the same self-criticism they demand of Yugoslavs.

Rato Dugonjutch, member of the central committee of the Yugoslav Communist Party, gave this advice in a reply to an attack on his party by Russian Writer Puchlov in the December 1 issue of the Cominform Journal.

"The principle of Bolshevik self-criticism does not apply only to small states such as Yugoslavia but to large ones, too," he said.

GI Casanova's Girl Convicted Of Hiding Him

Berlin, Jan. 5 (AP).—Edward J. Lada, down to his last girl friend, got her into a jam with the United States occupation forces today.

A military government court convicted Ruth Riecki, 22-year-old mother of his child, of hiding Lada after he had escaped from a military police stockade December 18. The young woman will be sentenced next week.

Lada learned today the Army will try him on seven specific charges for crashing the Russian blockade to enter the American zone of Berlin "just to visit my girl." (It turned out to be two girls.) The penalties could amount to 10 years in jail and $10,000 in fines. His trial was set for January 14.

The 28-year-old veteran had walked through the Soviet sector to visit Miss Riecki. She and a blond German actress, Ursula Schmidt, had a public tug of war for his affections, each contending he had come to visit her.

Finally Ursula said they were sweethearts no longer.

Lada said he wanted to stay in Germany and marry Ruth. Then he escaped and was recaptured.

Joliot-Curie Says Atomic Data Safe

Paris, Jan. 5 (U.P.).—Frederic Joliet-Curie, French high commissioner for Atomic Energy, said today he would quit the Communist Party if it ordered him to betray atomic secrets to Russia.

Speaking at an Anglo-American Press Association luncheon, Joliot-Curie said that although he is a Communist he would regard it as treason to France to disclose atomic information to any other country.

"If tomorrow we should discover an essential atomic secret still unknown to any other country our duty as Frenchmen would be to guard it jealously as a secret in France until the United Nations succeeded in outlawing all atomic weapons," he said.

"No French citizen has the right to communicate to any foreign government secrets obtained by the means of credits and materials placed at his disposal by his government," Joliot-Curie declared.

Asked what he would do if the Communists ordered him to betray secrets, he said: "Then I would not consider the Communist Party any longer my party."

Joliot-Curie said France would continue to publish her basic atomic discoveries for the benefit of all nations, but would keep secret their practical application. These secrets, he said, would be exchanged for other countries' atomic secrets or raw materials.

"A few years from now, France will be completely independent as far as uranium production is concerned, thanks to research undertaken in France and in the French empire. Her second atomic pile will be much more powerful than the first and will permit more extensive discoveries in the future," he said.

Turning to communism, he said: "We represent social progress and Russia today is in the same situation as was France in 1789. We are emissaries of a new world, even if it takes 100 years to come into being."

[The New York Herald Tribune correspondent said Joliot-Curie was asked what his position would be on the latest Russian ukase denouncing a good deal of modern physics as un-Marxist and hence illegitimate. He went all around the question, but did not quite answer, although the impression he gave was that if the choice is ever put cleanly before him he will probably take the Marx and let the physics go. In any case, he said, the fact that the question is of such great public moment in Russia is a sign of the advance of civilization in the Soviet Union.]

Expelled Red Denies Charge By Chambers

New York, Jan. 5 (U.P.).—A charter member of the United States Communist Party, who was ousted after 29 years as an active Communist, testified today before the Federal grand jury investigating Red espionage.

Max Bedacht, who once served as national Communist Party secretary and was a member of its national committee in the 1920s, appeared before the grand jury for half an hour.

As he left, reporters asked him if he knew Whittaker Chambers, former Communist courier who broke with the party some 10 years ago.

Knew Him Slightly

"I think I did meet Chambers at party meetings, but I never knew him intimately," Bedacht said.

He said he was expelled from the party last October 13 and termed his ouster "unfair punishment."

Bedacht denied that he had introduced Chambers to J. Peters, the alleged head of the Communist underground in this country, as Chambers had previously charged.

"I had no occasion to introduce them," he said. "Chambers must have been dreaming."

Inslerman Again Appears

Bedacht said he had never heard of Felix August Inslerman before. Inslerman, a "mystery witness," appeared before the grand jury for the third straight day and continued refusing to discuss his connection with the probe. Two other unidentified men also entered the grand jury rooms.

It was learned that Inslerman had been employed at the General Electric Co.'s Schnectady, N. Y., plant since September, 1946, and that he was an electrical engineer specializing in the highly secret, guided-missile warfare. Throughout the war he worked at the Republic Aviation Corp.'s plant at Farmingdale, N. Y., where the American version of the V-1 buzz bomb was developed in 1944.

B'nai B'rith Spy Seminar

The House Committee on Un-American Activities has justified its continued existence, although its procedures should, and probably will be, overhauled, Fulton Lewis, jr., radio commentator, and Bert Andrews, Washington correspondent, agreed last night.

"They have established that someone stole highly confidential State Department documents . . . and the American people are entitled to know 'who done it'," said Andrews, head of the Washington Bureau of the New York Herald Tribune.

Lewis, sharing the platform with Andrews at the Jewish Community Center, 16th and Q sts. nw., said, "No information should be released about anyone until the facts are proven."

Sponsored by the Argo Lodge of B'nai B'rith, the forum was the first of a series of panel discussions offered by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Good-Intentioned Pete Finds Car Has a Pusher

Olympia, Wash., Jan. 5 (AP).—Pete McMichael had good intentions, but—

He was out for a morning walk when he saw a driverless car moving slowly along the street.

A few more feet, McMichael thought, and it would head down a hill. He put his shoulder to the radiator, braced himself, and brought the machine to a halt.

Then the owner came around from the back of the auto.

He asked McMichael kindly to step aside. He was shoving the car to get it started.

"I'm not sure, dear, but I THINK Junior's taking his first step!"

subversive by the United States Attorney General.

4. Publicly or privately advocated revolution by force.

Other cases in the most serious category include individuals (but not their spouses) who are shown to have:

5. Deliberately withheld important facts from the questionnaire used by the FBI for a check-up;

6. Violated or disregarded security regulations to a serious extent;

7. Been declared insane, or treated for serious mental disorder without evidence of cure;

8. Been convicted of felonies indicating "habitual criminal" traits;

9. Addiction to alcohol or drugs.

Second Category

In the second category were cases in which "reasonable" evidence indicates that the individual or his spouse is:

10. Sympathetically interested in totalitarian, Fascist, Communist or other subversive political ideologies;

11. Sympathetically associated with members of the Communist Party; or with leading members of any other organization branded subversive by the Attorney General. ("Ordinarily," the commission said, "this would not include chance or casual meetings, nor contacts limited to normal business or official relations.")

12. Identified with so-called "front" organizations of subversive groups—provided that "the personal views of the individual are sympathetic to or coincide with the subversive lines."

13. Identified with an organization "known to be infiltrated with members of subversive groups" provided "there is also information . . . which establishes the probability that (the individual) may be a part of or sympathetic to the infiltrating element . . ."

14. Closely related to persons living "in a nation whose interests may be inimical to the interests of the United States, or in satellites . . . thereof." (The commission said this should be carefully weighed "in the light of the risk that pressure applied through such close relatives could force an individual to reveal sensitive information or perform sabotage.")

15. In "close, continuing association" with individuals who have subversive interests and associations.

16. A former "close associate" of such individuals but separated at present from them by distance, and likely to renew the contract.

Also in the last category are two tests to be applied only to the employe, and not to his spouse:

17. Conscientious objection to military service in wartime, unless it can clearly be shown to be due to religious convictions;

18. "Manifest tendencies demonstrating unreliability or inability to keep important matters confidential . . . gross carelessness in revealing . . . restricted data; abuse or trust; dishonesty; or homosexuality."

Our Inept "Mayor"

Many civic leaders who attended the dinner given by the Board of Trade in honor of new members of Congress on Tuesday night found themselves apologizing for the inept speech of Commissioner John Russell Young, president of the Board of Commissioners.

Mr. Young was on the program for a welcoming address. What he delivered was more in the nature of a scolding to Congress than a greeting. He grumbled about the failure of Congress to pass a District sales tax and said that he had done "everything but hit Senator Johnston in the jaw about the sales tax last year." He insulted the members of the Senate and House District Committees, who were special guests at the dinner and who include many of the best friends the District has in Congress, by saying, "I suspect that sometimes they put members on our own committees when they don't know where else to put them."

The message that the Commissioner was trying to convey appeared to be summed up in his declaration that "this town is broke." What he proved most emphatically, however, was the bankruptcy of civic statesmanship—of even common discretion—in the presidency of the Board of Commissioners. The whole point of this otherwise commendable occasion was to cultivate friendship and understanding between civic Washington and members of Congress. Mr. Young's bumbling speech probably offset most of the good will that was developed by the remainder of the program. Congressmen sat back and asked if this man was really the "Mayor of Washington." A buzz of conversation among both members and guests broke out as if to blur the incredible performance of the city's leading official.

Again the District was deeply humiliated. And this is only the latest of many occasions on which he has unmistakably demonstrated his unfitness for the important post he holds. If he remains in that position until the expiration of his term next April, civic Washington will be compelled in self-defense to launch a campaign against his reappointment.

Prisoners Of War

The sharp American note to Moscow on German prisoners of war, reinforced by simultaneous French and British notes, has brought into the open a situation that has bothered the Western Allies less publicly for some time back. The present move is at least in part a gambit in the cold war—or rather in the increasingly warm rivalry for the affections of a former enemy. The fate of German war prisoners in Soviet hands is something Moscow will find difficulty explaining in any way not damaging to the Russian suit.

Retaining prisoners of war to help repair the wartime damages of invasion and bombing always appeals to the bomb and invasion victims. The French, who suffered four years of German occupation, and the British, whose cities were blasted by German bombs, felt this way. Both were reluctant to repatriate their prisoners as quickly as we did. Nevertheless, they agreed to the return of all prisoners by December 31, 1948, and both have fulfilled the obligation. The more than 100,000 former prisoners who are wage workers in France, and the 15,000 in Britain, were given their individual free choice to stay.

The Russians, to whom the usefulness of German war prisoners was perhaps even more apparent, made the same agreement. It was signed at the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers in April, 1947. At that time Molotov said the Russians had some 890,000 prisoners, a figure that looked suspiciously low in the light of previous Russian boasts of the number of prisoners they had taken. It was agreed that the Allied Control Council would function as the information exchange and central operations point in the repatriation process. But the Russians have never brought in any repatriation plan nor any information. So far as is officially known, only 447,000 Soviet prisoners have been returned. That would appear to leave 443,000 still in Russian custody, though, without any facts from the Russians, estimates run from 200,000 up as high as a million.

The Russians now admit they are behind the April, 1947, schedule. But they say that failure to supplement the Moscow agreement at the Control Council level, a failure due solely to them, lets them out of the original agreement. It looks, as the American note says, more like a case of bad faith. And, of course, no such specious plea can be made with respect to the estimated 400,000 Japanese prisoners of war still in Russian hands. As Mr. Byrnes points out, the Russians alone are holding Japanese prisoners. These prisoners are not—at least not yet—pawns in a tug-of-war for Japanese sympathies. But they are in just the same spot with respect to Moscow's word. The Potsdam surrender proclamation, to whose terms the Russians acceded when they entered the war against Japan, pledged return of all Japanese prisoners of war. Russia's breach of faith to its allies is as glaring in one case as in the other.

Meeting The 81st

The President radiated confidence as he faced the Eighty-first Congress and delivered himself of his views on the state of the Union. The distaste he felt for his august job in the early days is now turned to relish. He is now an elected President. He must have the same sense of satisfaction that a man gets from making his own fortune instead of inheriting it. The feeling is compounded in the President's case by the return of his party to control of Congress. This is what gives him a sense of power as well as satisfaction. Instead of talking to the desert air, Mr. Truman yesterday found himself talking to men who at least during the honeymoon period will be, as Speaker Rayburn put it, favorably disposed to his program.

The message will be sifted for the redemption of some of Mr. Truman's main pledges during a campaign of extravagant promises. There is, for example, the Taft-Hartley Act. Repeal is recommended, though with the proviso that most of the provisions of the law shall be reenacted along with the Wagner Act. Such a performance is bound to be as protracted as it is wasteful. It calls to mind the White Knight—getting us all balled up as to what a thing is, or what it is called, or what its name is. The really important item is what the President has in mind when he calls for some device for settling or preventing strikes in vital industries which affect the public interest. Compulsory arbitration?

If there was one group in the country whose votes swung the election, it was the farmers. Who will forget the wait in the early hours of November 3 for the normally Republican rural vote to electrify the pundits by going for Truman? At that time many prices on the farm were falling. Many of the farmers, who as a class have never known such absolute and such relative prosperity, now think that Mr. Truman owes them a complete 90 per cent price support. The Aiken law, framed with regard to overall stability, substituted a sliding scale, and the law corresponds with common sense and the national welfare. The President is vague as to his intentions on agriculture, merely applauding price support. We hope that he will demonstrate in this particular that he is President of the entire country, not merely the farmer's tool.

The President well says that "our first great opportunity is to protect our economy against the evils of 'boom and bust.'" The consequences of an economic collapse are now quite calculable. Never before in peacetime history has another power put at the top of its objectives the hope and the promotion of an economic bust in America. Yet this is the Soviet's avowed aim. In other words, a downturn in America means a war of the spheres, and the maintenance of a steady economy of full employment, consequently, has become a preservative of peace.

The President's object is to steer the country between the Scylla of inflation and the Charybdis of deflation; in other words, to keep the economy on an even keel. The message seems posited on the assumption that the economy is inflated. At any rate, the same anti-inflation program is advanced that the Eightieth Congress rejected, with one interesting addition, viz, an inquiry into the possibility of expanding the bottlenecks of supply in such materials as steel. There is a plethora of reform measures which, in the main admirable socially, may increase the stresses of inflation, and will surely call for allocations of goods in short supply as well as priorities for capital issues, especially as rearmament is now a competitor for materials.

However, the presidential assumption that we are in an inflation is now questioned by many economic experts. It is said that the inflation is now leveling off, if it hasn't stopped altogether; and before the honeymoon is over the Administration might have to turn its mind to ways and means of reversing a deflationary trend. In this situation the message would look behind the times in that part of it which calls for more personal income taxation, though, as the President's spending program goes into effect, the signs of deflation may be obliterated. On the whole the message lived up to expectations, and the country will echo the final wish in it, namely, that President and Congress will keep in mind the "welfare of the people of this Nation as a whole."

Vice President's House

A bill introduced on the opening day of Congress would authorize an appropriation of $500,000 to a million dollars for the Government to buy or build a mansion in Washington for the Vice President. This would allow the V. P. to live in a style to which the holders of that office have become totally unaccustomed, but much as we would like to see Senator Barkley well housed, we think such a bill ought to be judged as the opening wedge it would certainly be.

Unquestionably the office of Vice President could and should be a more important position in the Government of the United States than traditionally it has been. At the very least the occupant of that office could take part of the load of official entertainment off the President's shoulders—though that would not materially enhance the dignity of the office. But there are great and deep chasms of precedent that must be bridged before the Vice Presidency can become the second ranking position in the Government—if it ever can.

The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, for example, as head of a coordinate branch of the Government, has an equal or greater claim to be housed, if the criterion be importance. And if the Chief Justice gets a house free, should not the other eight justices have some consideration? Indeed, another claimant can be found right on the Hill. The Speaker of the House, under the present dispensation anyway, ranks just a shade under the President of the Senate.

And if functional importance be the measure, then the Secretary of State is a more important official than the Vice President—and has, furthermore, more visiting dignitaries to entertain. But no one would suppose that one Cabinet member, even though the first among equals, should be housed by the Government unless all were. And so on. The end result is that some 20 officials immediately present themselves as claimants to free housing, some of them with stronger claims than the Vice President.

Code For Investigators

It is especially gratifying to this newspaper to note that Majority Leader Lucas in the Senate and Majority Leader McCormack in the House are introducing a resolution to set up a code of fair procedure for congressional investigations. Just a year ago we launched a campaign to bring about the adoption of such a code after carefully studying the conduct of congressional investigations and the feasibility of laying down rules for the investigators. We have since supported every constructive step in that direction. We confess, therefore, an extraordinary interest in this reform, which appears to be coming to fruition even sooner than we had hoped.

The Lucas-McCormack resolution would substantially clarify the status of witnesses before congressional committees and in large measure protect them against false and malicious accusations. Every witness subpenaed could be accompanied by counsel and would have the right to file a sworn statement or make an oral statement in his own behalf at the end of his testimony. Persons believing their reputations to have been damaged by testimony before an investigating committee would have the right to testify personally, to file a sworn reply which would be made part of the record, to present witnesses in their behalf, and to cross-examine their accusers for not more than an hour. Accused persons would have to be given a chance to reply before the committee could issue a report reflecting upon them. And no reports of investigations could be published until approved by a majority vote of the full committee at a meeting called on proper notice.

Every one of these points was recommended to Congress in our series of editorials entitled Turning On the Light. Some other suggestions in those editorials and in the more recent code of fair procedure sponsored by the New York City bar have not been included in the Lucas-McCormack resolution, but so far as it goes it is both sensible and constructive. Congress has been shamed by the manner in which its investigative powers have frequently been used. We suspect that a great majority of its members will now see the necessity of throwing safeguards around this great power of compelling witnesses to testify for the enlightenment of Congress and the public. The power of turning on the light in a democracy is too vital to be entrusted to those who abuse it. We hope that congressional investigators will never feel free to substitute the smear for the careful unearthing and verification of facts.

Military Death Benefits

The news that the Veterans' Administration will start paying out two billion dollars in dividends this summer to holders of National Service Life Insurance is likely to be somewhat misleading. The dividends will be real enough, and some 16 million past and present policy owners may share in them. But there is no actual surplus when all costs of GI insurance are totaled up. Government appropriations have carried the overhead, and the insurance has been offered at below cost to induce full participation by servicemen. For veterans, National Service Life Insurance amounts to a form of continuing subsidy. The so-called dividends result from an overestimate of the mortality rate among policyholders—but after the Government has underwritten a portion of the cost of the insurance.

Like Government insurance in World War I, National Service Life Insurance was instituted both as protection for men in service and as protection for the Government against claims. By and large it has worked successfully, despite many annoying difficulties. But it never covered all men in service, although many inducements were offered. Many more canceled their policies upon discharge, and now only seven million are in force. Moreover, as Marshall Andrews has pointed out in articles in this newspaper, keeping track of policy payments and changes of address has caused an almost unbelievably complex administrative burden.

It is this administrative problem, plus the lack of complete coverage, to which the Hook Commission addressed itself. In its report last month, this group advocated closing National Service Life Insurance altogether to new entrants and providing in its stead an automatic $10,000 death benefit. This benefit would be payable without cost to survivors if servicemen died on active duty, during disability retirement or a certain period after normal retirement. It would, the commission notes, result in substantial savings to the taxpayer and overcome a principal objection to service life insurance, that it "frequently is not utilized by the many persons who have most reason to protect some dependent against their death." This plan, it seems to us, has a great deal to commend it. It would not relieve the Veterans' Administration of the job of administering insurance policies now in force, but it would provide a far more adequate and less cumbersome method for affording protection against the hazards of military service in the future.

Diplomatic Documents

Your advocacy of greater financial support for the publication of American diplomatic documents in the Department of State publication, Foreign Relations of the United States, will be welcomed by all scholars interested in the history of our foreign policy. However, you do an injustice when you state that publication is retarded not only by lack of financial support, but by resultant lack of ability.

Professors of history who have had occasion to observe, and to use, the work of the foreign relations editing branch would, I am sure, be unanimous in saying that there, as so often in the Government, effort and ability bear no relation to financial compensation. That branch of the publications division certainly needs more funds; it also deserves praise for what it has accomplished without adequate funds. HISTORIAN.

Indonesian Terrorism

Perhaps, if Mr. Armstrong (letter published December 30) had read the voluminous material submitted to the U. N. on the Indonesian situation, he would have been less severe in his condemnation of the Netherlands. The story of terrorism and breach of the truce agreements offer much justification for the police action undertaken by the Dutch.

Although bound by the so-called Renville Agreement to cease all hostile acts against the Dutch, the Republic of Indonesia has not only countenanced underground activity and terrorist raids but has actually encouraged and supported them. A typical example of the underhanded policy of the republic is the following excerpt from the order of February 26, 1948, of the chief of staff of the republic's army in Sumatra:

". . . organized action is possible even without the use of weapons, as by removing parts of a machine . . . so that by this removal repairs are impossible. The workers of factories and industries will know more about this. Strikes can be organized in commercial business, e. g. the closing of shops, refusal of shopkeepers to sell to the enemy, or the sale of poisoned goods. Barbers can cut the enemy's throat while serving him . . . housewives when visited by Netherlanders will do well to receive them hospitably, but not to forget to administer a special medicine, so that . . . there is no longer any need to call a doctor . . ."

It would appear also that American sympathy for the republic is wholly wasted, since the leadership follows the Communist Party line in most of its propaganda, referring to this country as "imperialist" and insincere. The republic's government has often aligned itself against the force of "capitalism and imperialism." And that means us. ROBERT DULANY.

Press Club Rules

As an active member of 25 years' standing and a three-time member of the board of governors of the National Press Club, permit me to cast a vote.

An outraged lady, hiding behind the signature, "Woman Correspondent," aired her views in a letter to the editor on December 30, about the sex discrimination in the Press Club. This anonymous lady made quite a few statements and came to the conclusion that an editor would be justified in not assigning a woman to Washington coverage because she did not have the run of the Press Club.

Might I suggest that an editor would be justified in not assigning any feminine reporter to Washington who could make as many misstatements of fact in a relatively brief letter as did "Woman Correspondent"?

Running roughly down the line:

1. The National Press Club was founded early in the century as a male organization. Women have never been admitted to membership. Wives and daughters of members and their guests have dining and social privileges in certain portions of the club.

2. Newspaper women were not barred as such because one of their number got drunk on the club premises. The fact is that some years ago all active newspaper women were given permanent courtesy cards. Several of these ladies abused the privilege badly by consistently bringing large luncheon and dinner parties in and stridently demanding instant and simultaneous service. This was overlooked, albeit painfully, by dues-paying members. The straw finally was piled on the camel's back, however, when one newspaper woman complained loudly to a club employe that she was being forced to stand and wait for a luncheon table because the dining lounge was full of "half-witted, silly wives" of members. It was then that the courtesy cards were revoked.

3. No chair was thrown out of the club window onto 14th st. by a member.

I highly respect and admire a number of the women news correspondents in Washington and elsewhere. I am not attempting to indict them as a group. I would suggest, however, that there are two women's newspaper organizations in Washington. Equal rights being what they are, and free enterprise being what it is, the gals are just as able to build themselves a club as were the men. And they can bar the men. GEORGE DURNO.

Miscegenation

A major omission in Alfred Steinberg's article of January 2 on "Our Miscegenation Law" gave the unfortunate impression that there has been no break in the consistent holdings of State courts that antimiscegenation laws do not violate the Federal Constitution.

The heartening fact is that in one of the country's leading jurisdictions — California — the State Supreme Court on October 1, 1948, held that the California law voiding marriages of "white persons with Negroes, Mongolians, members of the Malay race, or mulattoes" was invalid as denying all persons the equal protection of the laws in contravention of the Fourteenth Amendment. That California is subject to prejudices as strong as may be found anywhere in the South is evidenced by the vigorous dissent filed in that case.

The California decision, together with the recent "Kingsblood Royal" situations in Mississippi and Virginia, will perhaps bring the problem before the United States Supreme Court for long-awaited action striking down these unconstitutional "color guards."

Tax On Fat

Now that the new Congress is faced with serious budgetary problems there is one fiscal possibility which appears to merit exploration. That is a special tax on fat people, suitably graduated.

While such a tax could not, of course, furnish a solution of all our budgetary problems, it would have many sweeping advantages. If fat people paid more, taxes on people who were not fat could be lowered. To gain this exemption most fat people would reduce. That would result in more food for all and, consequently, lower food prices. It would also provide more room on sidewalks and in buses and streetcars. And, esthetically, it would undoubtedly add considerably to the beauty of our cities and streets.

Street Slums And Alley Dwellings

I am disappointed that your interesting December 26 story, "Christmas is Just Another Day in Alley Slum," gives the reader an impression that in Washington's lexicon the words "alley" and "slum" are practically synonymous. If they were we could, theoretically, get rid of our slums by demolishing the "remaining 1300 alley dwellings."

Unfortunately, however, the 1300 alley dwellings are only a very minor part of the 40,000 to 44,000 substandard dwellings in the District of Columbia, and most of the alley dwellings are in squares that contain substandard street dwellings. So getting rid of these alley dwellings alone would be futile. There also is the question, "Where would their tenants go?" There are no decent street houses available.

Kings Court, the subject of your December 26 story, is illustrative. You do quote Elder Lucy Wilcox and me to the effect that the whole square is a slum; but that is in the last paragraph. The first paragraph, the one that is most read, features, "Kings Court, a collection of alley slums." Yet the square containing Kings Court has a real story which you missed, a story with as much human interest as "the burlap refuse bags hanging from second story windows," and the "undisturbed spectators" of "just another fight."

It has the story of those who live in the tenements that front on streets surrounding Kings Court. And in addition it has the story of Washington's futile efforts to deal with its slum problem by half-way measures; as by converting an alley into a minor street—Neal Place, of which Kings Court is a small off-shoot.

Your story refers to a chapter in Charles F. Weller's book, Neglected Neighbors in the National Capital (published in 1909—nearly 40 years ago). But the significance both of that chapter and of the succeeding chapter, "National Flats," is now shown. Mr. Weller's book is divided into four parts: 1. "The Alleys;" 2. "The Tenements;" 3. "The Shacks and Shanties;" and 4. "General Lessons, Remedies and Ideals."

The shacks and shanties, except for a few outlying areas, have become a memory. The alley dwellings have lost much of their significance because they have done most of their degenerative work; most of them now are part of surrounding slums.

Fifteen years ago your story would have been a stimulus to action. Today its very interest tends to divert attention from the real job that remains to be done: clear away all the slums, assure proper housing for all their tenants. The remaining inhabited alleys should be cleared away as an incident to this bigger and more significant job. In place of alley dwellings the threat today comes from street "tenements"—multi-family dwellings, many of them old one-family houses that have been divided into tiny "apartments."

Lipsticks Vs. Profit Sheets

By Malvina Lindsay

Who Pays The Piper?

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S message to Congress yesterday made many a citizen ask himself, "Who will pay?" Yet simultaneously the "Not I!" chorus was resounding through the land.

After a year of head hiding in the sands of income tax reduction, it was hard to take, this realization that democracy today is a luxury for which a high price has to be paid. Yet, as the President pointed out, it had to be defended in a perilous world and maintained at home by adequate attention to the education, health, employment and old-age security of its citizens.

Nevertheless the blocs are forming to see that the other fellow pays the bill.

"Increase my taxes on profits and there'll be a real depression," warns the corporation head.

"Put a bigger payroll tax on me for social security and I can't buy anything—sales will drop," protests the wage earner.

"Raise income taxes and I'll go completely broke," shouts virtually everyone.

On top of this is heard the growing clamor, "Remove excises and help the consumer—and incidentally business."

THE would-be repealers of luxury taxes have gotten together and will lose no time in letting the new Congress know of their plight. And dealers in travel, amusement, telegrams, telephones will be equally zealous.

Closely watching this offensive will be the consumers of so-called luxury goods who last year paid 470 million dollars to Uncle Sam in taxes for the jewelry, handbags, luggage, furs and cosmetics they purchased.

Representative Abraham J. Multer of New York will present his bill (tabled by the Eightieth Congress) asking for repeal of the 20 per cent luxury taxes. The Congressman and luxury goods manufacturers argue that repeal of these taxes will aid business, which has sagged in luxury fields, especially in the recent Christmas trade, and thereby increase the Government's income from business and corporate taxes against profits—in addition, save the Government the expense of collecting the 20 per cent tax from retailers.

Congress, remembering the President's message, thinking of the national budget of 45 billion dollars to be raised, is not likely to grant an outright repeal on excises. But even if it goes into consideration of reductions on some luxury taxes, as is expected, such dilemmas will arise as:

Is a $1 lipstick (tax 20 cents) a necessity to the average woman? Can she hold a job or a husband without it?

Is perfume as necessary as soap? A handbag as a man's pocket? Wedding rings as casseroles?

Are fur coats bought to keep their wearers warm or to provide social prestige? (Is social prestige a necessity?)

And from the travel and amusement exponents will come the argument that a movie or a trip is less a luxury than a bottle of toilet water.

SEVERAL women members of Congress are reported to look favorably on a readjustment of the tax on cosmetics, and there is believed to be much general sentiment for doing something about women's handbags—which are reported to have been originally included in the leather goods tax by mistake. But every taxed product will have its congressional supporters for tax repeal or reduction depending upon business interests of constituents.

However, since there is usually less public concern over indirect taxes, the lipsticks may have hard sledding competing with corporations and individuals for tax leniency. In the approaching tax fray, one outcome may be predicted with certainty—the consumer will pay sooner or later. If he buys a tax-free article on one front, he is likely to pay on another. For the general tax trend is to widen the base on excises, with some readjustments to correct injustices.

In any event the upkeep of democracy is not likely to decline so long as the world remains an armed camp. The question the average citizen needs concern himself with is not "Who will pay?" but "By what method will I pay?"

Federal Salaries

Much has appeared in the press recently from the Hoover Commission and others regarding the desirability of legislation to increase salaries of top Government executives.

I am not now a Government official or employe. Therefore, I feel qualified to speak without bias.

One thing, and the main thing, which these advocates of higher salaries for the "overlords" in the Government appear to completely overlook, is the fact that no high executive can do a good job without having under him employes who are loyal, earnest, and well-paid for the work they do.

It is about time that Mr. Hoover and those like him wake up to the fact that the under strata of Government employes are human beings worthy of salaries commensurate with the duties they perform.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Truman, Stalin, And Marx

IT IS interesting to read President Truman's message in the light of a remark which is quoted in a very useful study, called Stalin on Revolution, by an anonymous writer, actually a member of our diplomatic service, who signs himself "Historicus." Back in 1930, when the great depression was under way but before the New Deal, Stalin said that "If capitalism could adapt production not to getting maximum profit but to the systematic improvement of the material conditions of the masses of the people . . . then there would not be any crises. But then also capitalism would not be capitalism."

Lippmann

ACCORDING to the strict tenets of the Marx-Lenin doctrine, it is impossible for a society, which rests on the private ownership of the means of production, to avoid recurrent and ever-greater crises and to carry out a systematic improvement of the material conditions of the masses of the people. There is evidence, however, that in the highest circles of the Soviet Union a debate is in progress as to whether in fact American capitalism is developing as the orthodox Communist doctrine predicts.

The question has undoubtedly been raised. There are Communist scholars and experts who contend that because of the Keynesian economics (which Marx never imagined) plus the national commitment to full employment, plus the systematic enlargement of the social services, American capitalism may not founder in a crisis of unemployment, bankruptcy, inflation and deflation, class warfare and misery.

WE KNOW that this question has been debated in Moscow and among Communist leaders and theorists all over Europe. No one can talk with an intelligent Communist, Italian, Polish, French for example, without finding that sooner or later, usually sooner, he turns away from the spectacular issues of the cold war to ask questions about Roosevelt and the New Deal.

It was quite evident to me, judging by a few conversations I was able to have with serious Communists, that they are fascinated and puzzled by the idea that a reformed and humanist capitalism might present the world with something tremendous that is not dreamed of in the Marxist philosophy.

MY OWN guess is that this debate about the prospects of American society is at the bottom of the report about differences of opinion in the Kremlin, to which Mr. Truman referred recently in his Kansas City speech. For if Stalin believes, or even half believes, that American capitalism will not break down into a revolutionary crisis, that the survival of American power is assured, then in this generation at least a compromise—rather than struggle to the death—is strongly indicated. Those who wish to make the relentless struggle—as for example the late Zdahnov—can continue to prevail only if they can demonstrate to the realists in the Kremlin that the Marxist philosophy of American collapse is going to be fulfilled.

It has been said that our own intelligence services do not know where the President got the information which caused him to make his remarks. That seems to me surprising, if true. For I heard the same report, and with considerably more detail, from two quite different sources—once from a Communist of high rank and once from a neutral diplomat who has a long and deep acquaintance with Russian affairs.

IT IS exceedingly difficult, however, to interpret these reports. For while Stalin may now have a majority in the Politburo which is against war, which recognizes that eventually a compromise must be reached, we do not know whether the Russians think that the bargaining position of the West is growing or declining. Their views on this crucial point would probably determine whether they wish to hasten or postpone, facilitate or obstruct, settlements for Berlin, for Austria, and for Germany.

During the summer and autumn their tactics in negotiation have been stubborn but not adamant. Probably they are not certain whether on balance their position or ours is improving. Thus they have refrained from irrevocable acts and from ultimata and have avoided a showdown. But they have been in no hurry for a settlement.

WE TOO are uncertain as to how the balance of forces and bargaining power is developing. There is no doubt that in Asia the position of the Western powers has deteriorated greatly. Not only in China but in Indonesia, Malaya, Indo-China and Burma, the colonial revolution has made dramatic advances and we can not yet measure the effects on the recovery of Western Europe.

In Europe itself the postwar crisis is not nearly resolved. The industrial development of eastern Europe is not going well—Russia being quite unable to supply her satellites with the capital goods they need if they are to carry out their plans of reconstruction and development. In western Europe the critical period for France, for Italy and of course for western Germany, is ahead of us, not behind us. And in Germany there are ominous tendencies which, if they cannot be dealt with soon enough and wisely enough, may create a situation which could be resolved only after a period of violence.

THE PRESIDENT'S intuition that an effort should be made to reappraise, review, and reconsider the whole conflict, and that the diplomatic standstill should be broken by positive measures, seems to me well justified by the condition of Europe and by the prospects of the Western community. The President's intuition is at bottom not so different from the views of Mr. Churchill that matters should be brought to a head—however different the mode and manner in which it is expressed, however different the process by which the two men have reached such similar conclusions.

Taft-Hartley Repealer to Be Offered Today

Administration leaders moved swiftly yesterday to carry out President Truman's labor program centering around repeal of the Taft-Hartley law.

Shortly after Mr. Truman made his State of the Union report to Congress, Senator Myers (D., Pa.) started the legislative ball rolling on the labor front. He introduced a bill to raise the minimum wage from 40 cents to 75 cents an hour—as pledged by the Administration and Democratic platform.

A major stroke however, was set for today. At that time Senator Thomas (D., Utah) chairman of the Labor Committee said he will offer a Taft-Hartley repeal measure.

Mr. Truman, who has been battling for such action, asked the lawmakers to replace the Taft-Hartley Act with the Wagner Act with "certain improvements."

Union Men Hail Message

Spokesmen for labor unions hailed the President's message as fulfillment of his campaign pledge and promised their cooperation in working with Congress on "constructive" amendments to the Wagner Act.

CIO President Philip Murray said Mr. Truman "has kept full faith with the people who elected him. . . . We are sure that both labor and management groups, meeting within the spirit and framework of the President's message, can reach substantial agreement, once the Wagner Act is restored, on any problems that may arise."

AFL President William Green said his union members will cooperate with the President's recommendations. Once the Wagner Act is restored, he said, the AFL will "give sympathetic consideration" to amendments to strengthen collective bargaining and promote labor-management peace.

Taft Sees an Opportunity

John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers, had no immediate comment. But he has been an outspoken foe of the Taft-Hartley law—as well as of Mr. Truman.

Senator Taft of Ohio, who probably will head the five-man Republican Labor Committee delegation, had this comment on the Truman labor proposals:

"As soon as they open the door for changes, then we can try to shove in some other things."

What the "other things" might be the coauthor of the disputed labor law did not say.

Senator Brewster (R., Me.), however, said "it is obvious" that Mr. Truman has "abandoned the idea of repeal of the Taft-Hartley Labor Act since by his modifications of the Wagner Act he would maintain much of provisions considered wise."

Britons Seek Divorces

London, Jan. 5 (AP).—Petitions for divorce were filed today by the Earl of Warwick against the Countess of Warwick and by Viscountess Allenby against the Viscount, nephew of Field Marshal Allenby of Palestine fame. No details were made public.

Steel Supply Due to Balance Demand in '49

New York, Jan. 5 (AP). Leaders of the steel industry, now producing record tonnages, believe their own expansion programs will balance supply with demand this year, obviating any need for Government action suggested today by President Truman.

The President asked Congress to institute a study of "materials in critically short supply, such as steel." If found necessary, he said Congress should authorize Government loans for private expansion, or actual Federal construction of steelmaking facilities "if action by private industry fails to meet our needs."

Steelmen believe their program to add more than five million tons of ingot capacity over the period 1947 through 1949 is adequate for domestic and normal export requirements.

Expanding at Fast Rate

A spokesman for the American Iron and Steel Institute said today indications are that this expansion program has proceeded faster than had been expected.

The institute revises its figures on steelmaking capacity at the start of each year. Capacity on January 1, 1948, was 94,233,460 net tons.

The 1949 figures, to be issued within a week, are expected to show a greater steel ingot capacity than the Nation ever has had in either peace or war, exceeding even the 95,505,280-ton peak when this country was waging a world war.

The industry this week is operating at 100 per cent of January 1, 1948, capacity. The average for the past year runs close to 94 per cent.

Production in early December of 1,804,300 tons of ingots and castings set an all-time record for a single week.

Ingot capacity is the accepted yardstick of steel capacity, but for meeting actual requirements of customers crying for more steel to turn into manufactured products, a more accurate measurment probably is the total shipment of finished steel. These shipments hit a new record high of around 65 million tons in 1948.

As to progress of the industry's expansion programs:

Irving S. Olds, chairman of U. S. Steel Corp., said in a year-end statement that of its projected 900 million dollars for postwar construction, his company already has spent more than 650 million dollars.

Bethlehem Steel Corp. has disclosed plans to finance additional steel plant facilities and development of raw material properties through sale of 50 million dollars of bonds and 627,960 shares of common stock.

Baltimore Joins Phone Fight

Baltimore, Jan. 5 (AP).—The city moved today to fight a proposed increase in Maryland telephone rates.

It asked the Maryland Public Service Commission for authority to enter the proceedings as an interested party, pointing out that most of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. Maryland subscribers live in Baltimore.

"It is the considered opinion," said the city's petition, "that its best interests and those of its residents require that it actively oppose any increase in present telephone tariffs."

The telephone company asked the commission November 10 for rate increases which would cost Maryland residents about six million dollars a year.

Home telephones would run about 25 cents a month more, business service about $1.50 more. Toll calls within the State would go up from 15 to 5 per cent.

In mid-December the company asked for temporary increases of about four million dollars a year.

Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

A National Conservation Plan

INEVITABLY a State of the Union Message reads like a shopping list. It is the President's petition to Congress for those things he believes to be essential to the welfare of the Nation.

Childs

The Truman shopping list is long and all-inclusive. The President has asked for all the things he talked about in his campaign and some that he didn't talk about.

If he were to get all of them in just the form he asks, which probably not even the President expects, we should see well nigh revolutionary changes in this country. Thus along with civil rights, public housing, a national health insurance system, expanded social security and aid to education, he renews in a single sentence 10 words long his plea for universal military training.

There is little likelihood that Congress will grant universal training. It may even be doubted whether the President really wants it since it would add several billion dollars to the annual budget.

Since the message is a shopping list, covering the ambitious housewife's hopes and prayers as well as her urgent necessities, there may seem little reason to look behind the tersely stated items. Presumably from time to time the President will spell out specific requests in considerably more detail.

YET there is room for doubt and particularly on the score of natural resources and conservation. The President, who called in his campaign for more dams, more power line and more irrigation, dutifully asks Congress for more dams, more power lines and more irrigation.

But merely to ask for more is not enough. An over-all conservation plan is essential to end the duplication, waste and confusion that now prevail. If such a plan is in the making, it is very well concealed.

From within the Administration it is reported that one of the President's principal goals is to bring some order into the topsy-turvy structure of Government. Insofar as possible he will use the recommendation of the Hoover Commission on Government reorganization as a blueprint.

The commission experts have found waste not merely of dollars but actually of resources in the present duplication. They have studied the competing efforts of the Army Engineers and the Reclamation Service in the Department of Interior.

At one time the two services warred with each other. Now they are engaged in mutual back-scratching on river systems where both oppose the valley authority principle. To end the waste and duplication the Hoover Commission recommends a merger.

THIS may not be the answer at all, as both services will undoubtedly insist in loud publicity blasts. But there will remain the responsibility for providing an answer.

"We should apply the lessons of our Tennessee Valley experience to our other great river basins," the President says in his message.

The answer may be a Columbia Valley Authority and a Missouri Valley Authority. But we cannot be sure until we see how such plans fit not merely into the particular region but in the conservation pattern that must be worked out for the whole Nation.

The dreadful fact—the awful handwriting on the wall—is that millions of tons of topsoil go wasting down to the sea each year. That is an irretrievable loss which each year makes us a poorer Nation. It must be checked and it can only be checked through a national plan.

The time has come, it seems to me, to name a national conservation commission made up of the greatest experts in the field. To say "objective" might be futile, since the experts do not all agree. But it should be possible to get the best balance of opinion on a Nation-wide approach to what is the greatest single threat to our wellbeing.

This need not hold up the dams and the irrigation projects considered immediately essential. Congress can authorize the piecemeal work to continue. There should be no doubt, however, that piecemeal doling out of projects is at best a stopgap; that is to stay, better than nothing at all.

Here, it seems to me, is an opportunity that may not come again for a long time. Conservation, dams, irrigation had a lot to do with President Truman's reelection. Public opinion is prepared for something big. An item on a shopping list must be expanded into a great hope and a great vision.

B & O Will Lay Off 400 Again

Baltimore, Jan. 5 (AP).—Another layoff is in store for today for 400 of the 2755 Baltimore and Ohio railroad shop workers just returning from a two-week Christmas furlough.

B. & O. officials said the new furlough will begin Friday and will last indefinitely. It is to affect employes in 33 locomotive and car shops throughout the system, except the main shops here.

A seasonal decline in the company's freight traffic was given as the cause for the Christmas furlough, which also included about 7000 clerical workers not yet called back.

A railroad spokesmen said the "severe drop in business . . . has not picked up yet," and there are no immediate plans for rehiring the clerical employes.

Hood Rubber Company To Lay Off 800

Boston, Jan. 5 (AP).—Hood Rubber Co. today, planned to lay off 800 probationary workers before February 1, and blamed it on unseasonable mild weather.

The firm, a subsidiary of B. F. Goodrich Co., said the 10 per cent curtailment would reduce personnel to 6800—last June's level.

Company officials said normally the rubber footwear business picks up as winter comes to the West around Thanksgiving, and the East at Christmas time.

But this year, they said, reorders from retailers have been light and the company is cutting down to avoid inventory accumulation.

Employment Picture Better at Hagerstown

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 5 (AP).—The employment picture at Hagerstown plants looks better this year, D. Lee Staley, manager of the local State unemployment compensation office, said today.

Staley reported about 500 workers furloughed from Hagerstown plants for the Christmas holidays have been called back to their jobs.

He said most of the employes work in small plants and no major industries furloughed workers. Last year about 3000 workers were laid off for one week.

The Rustic Lunts Doff Their Denim

By Richard L. Coe

PEOPLE AND PLACES—Back from their farm to the big city have come Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt. . . . America's first acting couple periodically retire to the Farm, Genosee Depot, Wis., to replenish their vitamins, which, considering the long runs they're accustomed to, must be a necessity . . . At the moment they're rehearsing Sunday night's Theater Guild on the Air, for which they'll play Terry Rattigan's "O Mistress Mine," which has served them since December, 1944, when it opened in London as "Love in Idleness" . . . Their New York-Washington cast will accompany them on the air, the second Rattigan play to be aired by the Sunday night hour in two months . . . Monday morning the Lunts will buckle down to work on S. N. Behrman's adaptation of the Marcel Achard comedy, "Speak to Me of Love," which the guild and John C. Wilson will produce . . . As he has their recent vehicles, Lunt will direct and, also following custom, Madison's (Wis.) university theater will see the play's opening . . . They'll tour to the coast during the spring and bring the comedy East in the fall.

BETSY DRAKE, who succeds in bewitching Cary Grant in Keith's "Every Girl Should Be Married," and who, if rumor is right, does much the same offscreen, would have a lot of relatives, friends and classmates to greet her if ever she came this way . . . Her maternal grandparents were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Randolph Keith of Fairfax and about 10 years ago you would have glimpsed her as a fresh and shining student at Miss Madeira's . . . She studied theater at King-Smith's, then hit off for Hollywood, where all she got, she says, was the measles . . . She did win the London lead in "Deep Are the Roots," and coming back from that long run met Hollywood notables on shipboard . . . This Hollywood trip has brought Ann Keith's daughter overnight stardom.

BETTY CUSICK is another local Betty who's well up on her climb, singing with Vaughn Monroe's band beginning today on the Capitol stage. . . . Miss Cusick met Vaughn through WTOP's Eddie Gallaher, whose Top Talent contest she'd won . . . "Know any good gal singers?" asked Vaughn of Eddie one day at lunch . . . "Matter of fact, I do," replied Eddie, and that started things . . . Betty, who's a tiny mite, went up to Gotham for vocal lessons and joined the Monroe aggregation for its stage appearances . . . She's the wife of Pepco's Mr. Barnes and a week in her home town will bring many callers to the Capitol . . . High on her vocal list this week will be 'My Heart Stood Still," inspired by the Rodgers-Hart musical at the Palace, "Words and Music."

UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIANS being smart businessmen, I can't help wondering if there's some connection between a big musical which never reached Broadway and the Mask and Wig show which plays here Saturday night at Lisner Auditorium . . . This year's Mask and Wig show is called "Alaska Right Away," and in Philadelphia last winter I was at the closing performance of a $300,000 musical called "Bonanza Bound," which had the gol-durndest settings of Alaska . . . Could it be the boys bought those sets and costumes, thereby saving the producers heavy toting charges to the junk heap? . . . Anyhoo, Variety speaks happily of "Alaska Right Away," calling "it one of the better Mask and Wig show" . . . Which, considering some of the ones in which Dentist-Composer Clay Boland's songs have titivated in the past, sounds good . . . Tickets for Saturday night's performance at Kitt's.

BERT LAHR's joined the musical, "Make Mine Manhattan," replacing Sid Caesar for the national tour which will hit Baltimore in a few weeks . . . Boris Karloff and Una O'Connor have the leads in the Broadway-bound "The Shop at Sly Corner," with Antoinette Perry's daughter, Margaret, directing the chiller . . . Gael Sullivan will speak at the Variety Club's Monday luncheon, a testimonial to six past chief barkers . . . John H. Harris, the Pittsburgh ice-show man, is rejoicing over the speed with which "Ice-Capades" tickets are crossing the desks at the Fairway on our G st. . . . the ice revue opens at Uline's January 27 for a 10-performance run . . . Thomas J. Holland, manager of the Carver Theater in Anacostia, is jubilant over his new policy of getting the big pictures earlier . . . Greta Garbo's name is enough to bring two showings of "Anna Christie" at the Institute of Contemporary Arts, Friday and Saturday nights, at 8:30, 1322 New York ave. . . . Another revival scheduled this week is Saturday night's showing of "Great Expectations" at International Student House, 1825 R st. . . . Jane Walling May is offering her "Terpsicapers" tonight at 8 at the Evangeline, the young businesswomen's club for which Lou Downs is entertainment chairman.

ALWAYS TRAVELLIN'—Vaughn Monroe and his Moonmaids would, you think, get enough travel to satisfy anyone, but just for fun between shows they cut up on the outfit's motorcycle. This favorite of the radio and juke box polls arrives today for a week's stay on the Capitol stage

Dentist Makes Success of Photography

By Ollie Atkins

A DENTIST who studied photography for use in his dental prosthesis work has become one of Washington's outstanding amateur photographers. He is Dr. S. S. Jaffe, 407 Dorset ave., Bethesda, Md.

It was 14 years ago that Dr. Jaffe first recognized the need for pictures of his patients before removal of their natural teeth so the denture would give the patient his natural appearance.

Today, Dr. Jaffe is more than a nationally known figure in the dental profession; he is well-known in amateur photographic circles in this country and Mexico. He specializes in portraiture, although his large salon of Mexican scenic studies reveals he is well able to produce excellent out-of-doors work.

Very modest about his photographic achievements, Dr. Jaffe is connected with the National Photographic Society, the Photographic Society of America and the Royal Photographic Society of England. He has taken a host of awards and honors for his work.

An early exponent of miniature type cameras, Dr. Jaffe is now convinced that his best accomplishments are with larger cameras. In his complete studio-darkroom at his home here, Dr. Jaffee uses a regular studio type camera. His facilities are available for regular sessions of the National Photographic Society and others for classes in photo portraiture.

On January 15 Dr. and Mrs. Jaffe will drive to Mexico for a three-month photographic expedition and visit with their daughter there.

"All photographers should go to Mexico . . . It is so alive with dramatic and picturesque scenes," reports Dr. Jaffe.

"I find it pays to hire a guide who speaks Spanish and can get you around to places," Dr. Jaffe advised. "Most of the Mexicans are 'tourist wise' and will now pose only after the palms have been stuffed with at least a peso."

The real fame of Dr. Jaffe as a photographer comes from his exceellent portraits. On one occasion he made 100 different portraits of the same man. He uses orthochromatic films which brings out all facial details rather than blemish-covering panchromatic emulsions.

LOUIS WERNER, head of the Signal Corps Color Photography Laboratory, will give an illustrated lecture for members of the Photographic Seminar tomorrow. Werner's subject will be densitometry and sensitiometry. He will speak in Room 5065, South Agriculture Bldg., at 8 p. m.

The January print competition of the Fotocraft Club will be tonight at 8 p. m. at the 12th st. YMCA. A special section of the contest will be prints typical of Washington from the "Dome" to the various memorials. Guest judges will pick the winners.

A test sales campaign for the new Polaroid "picture-in-a-minute" camera was recently conducted in Boston and reports are the new camera went over big. At one department store camera counter the cops were called to keep order in the crowd, which bought the entire stock of the new picture machines in an over-the-counter sales promotion demonstration. Plans are to sell the cameras directly to dealers by the Polaroid people. So far no cameras are on sale in Washington.

From the standpoint of production, more photographic materials were produced during 1948 than in 1947, and the production of some items was several times that of 1940, the last normal year. In general, supplies of raw materials were more plentiful and new tooling permitted the introduction of more new apparatus and accessories than had been possible for many years. The report from the Eastman Kodak Co. says the industry as a whole is about three and a half times its 1939 size in terms of wholesale value of goods produced.

A photo contest for junior and senior high school students is being sponsored by Ansco and Scholastic magazine. Awards include two two-year scholarships at the Fred Archer School of Photography, Los Angeles, and one full course scholarship at the New York Institute of Photography in New York City.

Cash prizes are offered for the three best pictures in each of 13 classifications. If these pictures have been taken on Ansco film the awards are doubled. Complete details and entry blanks may be obtained by writing Scholastic-Ansco Photography Award, 7 East 12th st., New York 3, N. Y.

South of the Border . . .

The huge picturesque door of a Mexican church attracted the photographic eye of Dr. S. S. Jaffee, 407 Dorset Ave., Bethesda, who improved the picture by adding the native. It's a Rolleiflex shot on Kodak Plus X, 1/50th at F/11.

Fr. McGinley Named Fordham President

New York, Jan. 5 (U.P.).—The Rev. Laurence J. McGinley has been named new president of Fordham University, it was announced today.

Falls Church Status Snarls Welfare Funds

Another Falls Church-Fairfax County jurisdictional problem—this one over the handling of city welfare cases—was submitted to the County Board of Supervisors yesterday.

Already headed for the courts is the question: Does the county or city own schools in the new city of Falls Church, which was created last summer?

County Supervisor Maurice W. Fox, also a member of the County Welfare Board, said checks to all welfare recipients living in Falls Church have been held up this month.

Fox said the city stopped paying most county taxes January 1 and will now receive its own supplemental payments from the State. The Welfare Board, he said, felt it had no right therefore to spend county funds in the city.

The supervisors received a letter from LaRue Van Meter, Falls Church city attorney, asking the county to continue handling city cases for the present and be reimbursed later by the city.

The supervisors agreed to ask the Falls Church City Council to meet with them January 14 to discuss this and other problems arising from Falls Church's new status.

Fox said the welfare checks have been prepared and can be sent out immediately if a settlement is reached at the joint meeting. The supervisors also will meet Friday at 7 p. m. to set salaries for county employes.

The county police department submitted salary requests yesterday calling for increases averaging 6 per cent. The county's fiscal year starts July 1.

FALSE TEETH That Loosen Need Not Embarrass

Many wearers of false teeth have suffered real embarrassment because their plate dropped, slipped or wobbled at just the wrong time. Do not live in fear of this happening to you. Just sprinkle a little FASTEETH, the alkaline (nonacid) powder, on your plates. Holds false teeth more firmly, so they feel more comfortable. Does not sour. Checks "plate odor" (denture breath). Survey Shows 'Soft Spots' in 9 Fields Here

By S. Oliver Goodman

It's true what they said about "soft spots" in November retail sales.

Extent of the dip in Washington was revealed yesterday for the first time by the Census Bureau's monthly survey on independents' dollar volume. Sales in nine out of 19 fields were lower in November, 8 showed gains and 2 were unchanged.

The November "soft spots" were mainly in men's apparel, off 23 per cent; women's apparel, off 6 per cent; shoe stores, off 6 per cent; fuel sales, off 7 per cent; liquor stores, off 8 per cent, and jewelry stores, off 5 per cent.

Gains continued in lumber and building materials, up 8 per cent; auto sales, up 7 per cent; filling stations, up 14 per cent, and hardware, up 7 per cent.

Over-all dollar volume of independent retailers in Washington showed a gain of 1 per cent in November over the same month last year, while the 11-month total was 5 per cent higher.

Individually, the nonchain retailers fared as follows when compared with corresponding 1947 specials:

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Jan. 5 (AP).—Grains ended higher today, with trading more active than it has been in most recent sessions.

The market met a selling flurry during President Truman's State of the Union speech. Soybeans dropped around 3 cents to pace the decline. Other commodities followed, losing most of their early gains. Some of this nervous selling appeared to be based on the President's request for authority to control speculation on commodity exchanges.

The flurry ended quickly and the market bounced right back, led by deferred wheat and corn deliveries. Even soybeans, although inclined to lag, recovered all their lost ground. Actually the President's request for control of speculation had been expected by the grain trade.

Wheat ended unchanged to ¾ higher, corn was ⅝ to ¾ higher, oats were ⅛ to ⅜ higher, rye was ¼ lower, soybeans were ⅛ to ¾ higher and lard was 15 to 28 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Much interest was shown in the President's attitude toward price support legislation, although he did not say anything to solve the question of whether or not the Administration wants the present support law amended. Under this law, prices will be supported on a sliding scale of 60 to 90 per cent of parity after this year.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

COLLEGE BASKETBALL was asking for that messy bribery and betting scandal in New York the other night and it must be observed that our institutions of higher learning are not only in need of the same but could do with a smidgeon of common sense as well.

POVICH

Happily, the four small-time gamblers who tried to "fix" George Washington U. player Dave Shapiro to throw the game with Manhattan in Madison Square Garden by enough points to assure them a sure-thing were trapped with Shapiro's heroic help.

But the dismaying item is that colleges still heedlessly permit their teams to be exposed to the filthy betting elements that infest the games in the Garden and other public arenas. On the college's part, it is at least contributory negligence and unpardonably crass.

The colleges can scarcely say they weren't warned that they were flirting with scandal. How penetrating does the evidence have to be? As far back as 1945, four Brooklyn College players confessed they had been bribed to throw a game with Akron University. New York was the scene of the Filchock pro football bribery attempt for which three gamblers went to jail.

THE LENGTHS to which the conniving gamblers go to ingratiate themselves with college athletes and tempt them with "big money" was demonstrated in the Shapiro case. As far back as September 1, four months before the game, they contacted the player and began to negotiate for the big killing. College basketball has become such a big betting medium that there would be no trouble getting heavy money down on the game.

Not only are the colleges jeopardizing the integrity of the game by taking it off the campus into the public arenas that are the habitat of the conniving characters who are always looking for a sure-thing, but they are putting their athletes on a frightful spot. On the day when some uncooperative college boy is bumped off or slugged or done in for refusing to go along with a fix, the colleges will realize the full extremity of their greed for the Garden gates.

Basketball betting has mushroomed to a level with horse race and baseball betting and represents a high medium of action for the bookies, and the doubleheaders at Madison Square Garden are wagered on all over the Nation. The colleges have let themselves in for that sort of thing and are not only being used by professional promoters to feather their own nests, but are lending themselves to high-action betting coups.

GEORGE WASHINGTON U. is no more or no less guilty than dozens of other respected colleges which play in the Garden and are a push-over for the flattering invitations to compete there in the spotlight of Metropolitan press publicity. Even as august a body as the National Collegiate Athletic Association, supposedly all that is respectable, stages its year-end tournaments in the Garden in the midst of illegal betting that provides incongruous overtones to a college sport.

For its appearance against Manhattan the other night, G. W. U. was promised a guarantee of approximately $2500 or the option of a percentage of the gate receipts. That represented a bigger take than the school could earn in any other appearance, but the game in such a setting is passing out of the control of the colleges into the hands of professional promoters who say when they shall play, against whom, and for how much.

The whole set-up is profaning the game of college basketball anyway. The game ought to go back to the campus where it properly belongs instead of being set down in the midst of the vultures who are always looking for a sure-thing "deal." The campus atmosphere has gone out of the game and it has become a plaything for professional promoters and high-rolling sidewalk elements, with the latter drooling at the prospect of buying off some college boy with weak resistance to the temptation of a thousand bucks.

WEST POINT and most of the Ivy League colleges have resisted the blandishments of the Garden promoters and refused to let their teams play in the public arenas for the very reasons highlighted by this latest bribery scandal. A few years ago, Army athletic authorities publicly scorned the invitation of the Garden people with the declaration "the game belongs on the campus, not 49th st. and 8th ave. where we have no students or alumni."

For other colleges like G.W.U. without the vast field houses and gymnasiums of the bigger institutions, the Garden temptation is apparently great, however. As few as 400 fans have watched G.W.U. play in the local Armory. But there can be quarrel, too, with the dictum in too many colleges that the individual sports pay their own way, including coaching salaries. That's the office to go ahead and make it commercial.

Sure, the games in the Garden are lucrative. Those gate receipts are attractive to athletic department treasuries. But the other items of harvest can be sad. It's a flirtation with dynamite, and college basketball belongs to the colleges, not to New York sharpshooters.

Smith Has Ideas

'Rats' Who Soil Kids' Game Should Be Punished Properly

By Red Smith

Copyright, 1949, N. Y. Herald Tribune

New York, Jan. 5.—Along with District Attorney Frank Hogan, this bureau deplores all forms of sin, including armed robbery, gluttony, bribery of athletes and basketball players, profanity and telling fibs. The thesaurus lists no adjective too glowing for Dave Shapiro, cocaptain of the George Washington University basketball team, and no opprobrium suitable for the punks whom Shapiro trapped in their effort to bag George Washington's game with Manhattan.

It is to be hoped that in dealing with the crumbs who tried to bribe "Shapiro the hero," the law endeavors to let the punishment fit the crime. It is not enough merely to disinfect the city by tossing into pokey. Make 'em pass their afternoons backing odds on favorites at Aqueduct with a 16 per cent takeout, and their evenings watching basketball games without betting on them. The proposal is offered in spite of the constitutional guarantee against cruel and unusual punishment.

Americans properly reserve a special contempt for the vermin that foul up sport. The national religion holds that all's fair in love and war and business, but in a ball game you've got to level. Sport is an expression of the decentest instincts we know, and the tremendous appeal it makes to kids is a fine and healthy thing. Nothing that crawls is more noxious than the fixer, and the rottenest of them all is the one who soils a kids' game.

It is often possible to feel sympathy for the poor slob who yields to temptation in a moment of weakness, but a fix in sports has to be deliberate and calculated, malodorous from inception to consummation.

The current scandal is a case in point. The punks that tried to do business with Shapiro had been working at their dirty trade since last August. Naturally they considered themselves smart guys. Their sort always does. The fact that Shapiro was able to string them along for so many months and make such a sucker of the pay-off man that he would hand over the boodle to a cop, demonstrates how smart they were.

Or else it stamps Shapiro as an actor whose talents ought to

EaglesLooking For Buyer— With $250,000

Philadelphia, Jan. 5.—Owner Alexis Thompson today substantiated reports that his champion Philadelphia Eagles of the National Football League were up for sale for a figure between $250,000 and $300,000.

Thompson, recuperating from an appendicitis operation, said he is anxious to sell and authorized General Manager Charles Ewart to handle the sale.

"I have given Ewart a 60-day option on the club for the purpose of selling it, subject of course to my final approval and that of the league," Thompson said.

Sources close to the Eagle front office said a purchaser probably would be found before the annual meeting of N.F.L. owners in Chicago January 19.

Two weeks ago a group of Philadelphia businessmen, headed by James P. Clark, former Democratic city chairman, made an offer for the club but nothing came of it because the offer was for less than $200,000.

Shapiro's Friends Reveal

Gamblers Invaded G. W. Campus

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

SEVEN OF HIS FRIENDS, one of them his roommate and another a girl friend, knew all along that Dave Shapiro, George Washington basketball star, was leading four alleged game "fixers" into a trap, laid by the New York district attorney's office.

Art Cerra, 22, Shapiro's roommate at 814 22d st. nw., and Nadia Messing, 20 of Lawrence, Long Island, and a junior at G. W., said yesterday that they even met several of the gamblers when they boldly approached the G. W. athlete on the school campus last October.

This is how Cerra, a law student at G. W., described his meeting with Joseph Aronowitz of Brooklyn, arrested Tuesday night before the Colonials' Madison Square Garden game with Manhattan.

"One Sunday morning, on my way to church, I was walking out of Welling Hall, the athletes' varsity house, and saw Dave talking with a clean shaven thirty-fivish looking man.

"Dave called me over, and introduced me to 'Joe Aronowitz, an old friend of mine from New York.' I was in a hurry so I didn't wait around for conversation. I went along to church.

"That evening, Dave and I were sitting around gabbing, when he said to me, 'Do you know who that man was I introduced you to this morning?'

"I replied, 'no.'"

"'That was one of the New York gamblers I told you about, who's trying to get me to help throw some games.'"

"As I look back, Aronowitz was a surprisingly good looking, clean cut fellow, very personable," said Cerra. "He seemed to have been to Florida. He had a beautiful tan."

Miss Messing, contacted yesterday afternoon at her home in Long Island, said "Yes, I knew about it all the time, too, but this once, a woman had to keep a secret.

"I got a brief glimpse of two of the gamblers one night in the lobby of Welling Hall, and I must say that I was frightened stiff.

"They boldly walked into the lobby, interrupted a conversation between Dave and myself, and one of them said, 'Shapiro, let's take a walk.' I was petrified.

"Both men had their collars turned up, and they were greasy looking, just like the big-time gamblers you see in the movies."

"Dave went along with the two men, but I don't exactly know what happened during their visit," Miss Messing said. "However, I was with Dave when he sighed very dramatically after last night's game, and said, 'whew, it's all over at last.'"

The five other close friends of Shapiro, let in on the plot from practically its beginning are Cerra's father, Armand Cerra, a lieutenant on the police force in Brooklyn, Arthur (Otts) Zahn, head basketball coach at G. W., George (Jug) Garber, acting coach of the Colonial squad in Zahn's absence due to illness, President C. H. Marvin of G. W., and Director of Athletics Max Farrington.

John Leavy, 19, of Manhattan, a Phi Alpha fraternity brother of Shapiro's was a campmate at Copake, N. Y., last August when Dave received the first overture in the form of a letter asking the Colonial star to meet Aronowitz in New York.

"Dave passed the letter around, and we all laughed it off thinking it was a prank," said Leavy. "Everybody just forgot about it, including Bill Cantwell and Phil McNiff, other G. W. players who were at the camp."

Art Cerra then picked up the story again.

"Dave has been a close friend of mine for three years. I've never known a better guy. He's usually a tight-lipped fellow, but he confides with me.

"When he was contacted a second time, by telephone at the varsity house, he became worried. He asked me what he should do. I said that I'd ask my dad for advice.

"Dad said that the wisest thing would be to tell Coach Zahn. Dave did that and Mr. Zahn advised him to inform the district attorney's office in New York.

"Dave informed the D. A.'s office, and from then on my roomie was one jumpy fellow. Having played beside him on the G. W. basketball team last season, I could tell he was pressing. I also could see that his second-year law studies were suffering.

"These New Yorkers would come right on the campus to meet Dave, or call him at the varsity house. Dave, under instructions, would stall them off. He was trying to get them to give him money. They stalled him off, too.

"Before the North Carolina State game, they asked him to influence G. W.'s pointmaking by easing up. They squabbled over money, and Dave played the game as hard as he could.

"I knew that the police would close in on those men Tuesday night, and I'm relieved. Because now my buddy can relax and play his best game," concluded Cerra.

'Fix' Group May Be Front for Syndicate

By John Griffin

New York, Jan. 5. (U.P.).—An angry district attorney instructed a grand jury today to find out whether a basketball gambling "fix" that was foiled by a player was promoted merely by four "tin horn sports" or by a Nation-wide gambling syndicate.

District Attorney Frank Hogan, an unrelenting foe of bookmakers and gamblers, said "every attempt will be made to wipe out these vermin."

The jury heard its first witness less than 20 hours after the game between George Washington University of Washington, D. C., and Manhattan College of New York, was played in Madison Square Garden.

The witness was David Shapiro of Brooklyn, 25-year-old cocaptain of the George Washington team to whom the $1000 allegedly was offered to see that it lost to Manhattan College by 18 or 19 points.

George Washington won the game, 71 to 63, and afterward it was revealed that Shapiro had been working closely with New York police since last September 1 in an effort to break up the ring.

Shapiro, a Brooklyn law student at the District of Columbia school and a battle of the Bulge veteran who won four battle stars, was given almost sole credit for the apprehension of Joseph Aronowitz, 35; Philip Klein, 34; Jaik Levy, 40, and William Rivlin, 43.

The four were arraigned before Magistrate Ambrose J. Haddock on conspiracy and bribery charges and held in $50,000 bail for a hearing on January 11. After their arraignment they were questioned by Alfred Scotti, Hogan's special assistant in charge of racket investigation.

Quartet Believed "Fronts"

Scotti said he was convinced that "these men are fronts for other people" and that every effort would be made to break up the gambling syndicate.

Two of the men, Aronowitz and Klein, were arrested shortly before the game last night in front of a bar and grill across from Madison Square Garden when they kept a rendezvous with a man posing as Shapiro's uncle who was delegated to pick up the promised $1000 bribe money.

Actually, the "uncle" was Detective Max Rumack, who promptly arrested both men. The others were picked up as they bought plane tickets for Miami, Fla.

Hogan, who called a midnight press conference after alerting newspapers that a big basketball scandal was in the making, revealed the courageous role which Shapiro had played in "stringing along" with the four men.

First Approached in August

He said Shapiro first was approached in a letter from Aronowitz, apparently the leader of the quartet, when Shapiro was an athletic counselor at a summer camp in the Catskill Mountains last August.

Shapiro ignored the letter but on September 1 he received a tele-

Federal Bribe Bill Offered By Hebert

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Attempted bribery of GW's Dave Shapiro once again emphasized the lack of Federal legislation on the subject and reaction on Capitol Hill yesterday was spontaneous.

Representative F. Edward Hebert (D., La.) promptly reintroduced a bill he first offered to the Eightieth Congress to punish bribery in connection with interstate athletic competition. It proposes to punish offenders with fines up to $10,000 and imprisonment up to 10 years.

Hebert, long a champion of such legislation, immediately was promised strong support by several members of the new Congress who first made their names in sports.

Said Hebert, "I think Federal legislation is sorely needed to deter these cheap gamblers who threaten to ruin sports.

"One thing's sure, they don't like those Federal jugs."

Hebert's interest is a personal one. He was a New Orleans sportswriter for seven years on the States and Times-Picayune.

Hebert added that when his bill first was offered he received letters supporting it from nearly every big figure in sports. These included Bert Bell, National Football League commissioner; Gene Tunney, Jack Dempsey and other leading professional and collegiate

Flooded With Offers (Legit)

'I'm Glad It's All Over,' Says Shapiro Returning to GW

Dave Shapiro came back to Washington last night with an ear to ear grin of relief, and expressed surprise at the national attention given his expose of a basketball bribe attempt in New York.

"When District Attorney Hogan and I talked this whole thing over, he gave me the impression that the news would be kept quiet," he said.

"But this morning, I saw my family's picture all over the front pages of the New York papers, I hear that Congress might introduce new bills against bribery, and that the NCAA might do something about it, too.

"Now, I hear that my mother has been invited to appear on the "We The People" radio show, and I've been invited to appear at "Nat Holman Night" in Madison Square Garden next Tuesday."

Accompanying Shapiro on the train ride back were Miss Nadia Messing, 20, a G. W. schoolmate; Athletic Publicity Director Tom Coleman, and part of the Colonials' basketball squad. Shapiro, Coleman and Miss Messing rode in a club car, with the D. A.'s office paying the bill.

"I'm glad this is all over," Dave said. "Now I can settle down to catching up on my studies and playing good basketball. It seems like this has been going on all my life. It was so drawn out, and I felt so dirty. Sometimes I got so disgusted I almost wanted to forget about the whole mess."

WHO IS Dave Shapiro? The simple act of honesty which the Colonial basketball player performed and which thrust him so suddenly into the limelight just hasn't been prepared for.

Dave just forgot to or didn't care to tell anybody about himself and the record is sketchy.

Around the George Washington campus, the close friends with whom Dave has lived, played ball, studied, and partied for the last 2½ years, suddenly

Art Lewis Quits As W & L Coach for Miss. State Job

Lexington, Va., Jan. 5 (AP).—Art (Pappy) Lewis, head coach of football at Washington and Lee University since 1946, resigned today to accept a position as line coach at Mississippi State.

Lewis announced his resignation late this afternoon. Athletic officials at Mississippi State shortly thereafter announced that he would join the staff of Arthur (Slick) Morton.

Morton resigned as head coach of Virginia Military Institute here only a few days ago to become head coach at Mississippi State.

"Everyone connected with Washington and Lee has been grand to work with," Lewis said in announcing that he had quit, "but I simply cannot overlook the attractiveness of my new opportunity."

Athletic Director C. R. (Dudy) Noble of Mississippi State said Lewis would assume his duties as line coach on January 12.

Caps Shot Down, 88-68, By Bullets Before 5215

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

The Washington Caps' 17-game winning streak on the home court came to a sloppy end last night at Uline Arena as their bitter intercity rivals, the Baltimore Bullets, slammed out an easy 88-68 triumph in a Basketball Association of America game.

The largest crowd of the local season, 5215 paying fans, braved a downpour to see the Bullets beat Washington for the first time in history at Uline's. It was the Caps' fifth loss in 29 games this season, leaving their Eastern leadership quite safe and doing little to improve Baltimore's third place standing.

Two player flare-ups, involving dirty looks but no fists, marked action in the late stages. Freddy Scolari made motions at Reiser after being knocked off his feet as Reiser drove goalward, and Norlander joined with Lewis in a mild shoving match.

The Caps just didn't have it. A scoring eye, that is. Baltimore did and made what has usually turned into a head-and-head struggle a runaway before it was over.

At one point, midway of the third period, the Bullets boosted their 17-point half time lead to 21 points. Washington came back beautifully to trail by a mere six points after four minutes of the final quarter, but its rally ended there.

Behind the generalship of Player-Coach Buddy Jeannette and the clutch shooting of Connie Simmons, Hal Tidrick, Walt Budko and Fred Lewis, the Bullets put on a rally of their own to win it by 20 points.

Simmons, a lanky smoothie with no college experience, wound up with the game's high scoring honors, collecting 19 points to nose out Teammate Chick Reiser by three points. Johnny Norlander, Cleggie Hermsen and Dick Schulz, the last with some terrifically long shots, each totaled 10 points to pace Washington's erring attack.

'He Wasn't Afraid,' Father Boasts

Shapiro Family Proud of Their Son; 'He's Always Been an Honest Boy,' Says Mother

By Bus Ham
Post Reporter

THE SHAPIROS—David, mama and papa—told yesterday how they feel about the Madison Square Garden basketball bribery story in which David was the central figure.

Said Mama (Sarah) Shapiro: "David has always been an honest boy. He enjoys playing basketball too much to let anything hurt it."

Said Papa (Benjamin) Shapiro: "David did the right thing. He wasn't afraid of getting hurt by any toughies. He's a war veteran, you know."

Said David: "Listen, I'm not trying to look like a hero in this thing. I did those things because I thought they were the right things, the only things to do. I really had no alternative."

All three of the Shapiros were reached by telephone by The Washington Post—Mrs. Shapiro at home in Brooklyn, David and his father at the New York district attorney's office

David played a cat-and-mouse game with gamblers for four months before they were trapped in New York at the GWU-Manhattan game Tuesday night as the result of David's tips to the police.

"Sure, I thought about those guys trying to get tough if they suspected that the police knew what was going on," David said in reply to a question.

"But that type doesn't have real guts as a rule. Oh, they might try to be sneaky about it but there's really nothing much they could do.

"I felt all along that I had enough police protection."

It was at this juncture that David said, "Listen, I'm not trying to look like a hero in this thing."

He said that he simply liked basketball too much to see it get hurt—and that he thought too much of his teammates to ever let them down . . . and he'd been damn annoyed by the gamblers approaching him; that was enough to make him mad.

Mama Shapiro said that she knew David has something on his mind for months.

"You know how it is with a mother," she said. "She senses things. But David is the silent type.

"This experience must have been hard on David, especially with examinations coming up. I don't suppose he's been able to devote as much thought as he should to his studies.

"My first concern when we learned about it was for my son's safety, but we understood that the police were giving David plenty of protection.

"Yes, we saw him play in Tuesday night's game, and he's a good player. We're all great basketball fans."

Papa Shapiro said he had known for some time that gamblers had attempted to bribe David.

"How could we avoid knowing about it when they called David on the telephone right at our home," Papa Shapiro said.

"David was with the Ninth Air Force in the European theater in the World War, and I knew he would know how to handle people of that type."

Quarter Horse Loses Short Match Race

By Fred Hayden

Tropical Park, Fla., Jan. 5 (AP).—Olympia, a triple-stakes winning thoroughbred, barely beat out the crack quarter horse, Stella Moore, in a special match race that overshadowed the regular program here today.

Olympia, Kentucky-bred 3-year-old owned by Coral Gables resident Fred W. Hooper, completed the quarter mile straightaway dash about a head in front of the 4-year-old Texas-bred filly flying the silks of Florida Cattle Rancher Quintus I. Roberts of Palatka.

The winner, running against the wind, was teletimed in a swift 22 3/5 under veteran Willie Garner. On Stella Moore was Milto Trevino, who flew here from New Mexico to pilot the Roberts representative. Both were to carry 110 pounds, but Stella Moore had 113 up, including 3 pounds overweight for her rider.

While the tote was closed to the 9047 thrilled fans for this exhibition, thousands of dollars changed hands on the result. Texans and North Floridians took all the wagers they could get in backing the outstanding quarter horse of her age in 1948, according to reports, and there was no telling just how much was privately wagered.

Even the fact that the pacemaking apprentice, Logan Batcheller, rode three winners in the first six races—including the daily double—failed to compare in interest with the match race.

The two fliers broke well from the stall gate and appeared to be heads apart throughout the exciting speed test.

A few years ago a similar event was staged at Gulfstream Park. On that occasion the thoroughbred won easily. Tiger Call defeating Joe Palooka by several lengths.

Fred Hooper, who has raced quarter horses himself, got just bout his greatest thrill today since his Hoop Jr. won the 1945 Kentucky Derby.

Redskins Sign Cats' Berrang

A fourth new face was added to the 1949 Redskin roster yesterday when it was announced that Ed Berrang, 210-pound end from Villanova, had accepted terms.

Berrang, the 'Skins 5th draft choice this year, started all 20 of Villanova's games the past two seasons. His latest collegiate outing was in the Harbor Bowl January 1, when he helped the Wildcats to a 27-7 victory over Nevada. His vicious tackling contributed to the retirement of Stan Heath, Nevada passing star, with a damaged rib midway of the game.

The 24-year-old wingman, towering 2 inches over 6 feet, caught 15 passes for the Wildcats last season, three of them for touchdowns. He scored against Georgetown and Kentucky, and it was on the recommendation of Kentucky's Coach Paul Bryant that Berrang was drafted.

Berrang's performance at Villanova earned him honorable mention on the AP All-America, a berth on Colliers' All-Eastern team, and selection on the All-Catholic eleven of '48.

Dillard 2d, Joe Verdeur 3d in Poll

By Gayle Talbot

New York, Jan. 5 (AP).—Bob Mathias, 17-year-old marvel from Tulare, Calif., who won the Olympic decathlon championship at London, has been voted the James E. Sullivan Memorial Trophy as the outstanding United States amateur athlete for 1948.

The award, most coveted in the world of amateur sport, has been given annually since 1930 to the amateur "who, by performance, example and good influence, did most to advance the cause of good sportsmanship during the year."

Mathias, now a student at Kiski Preparatory School at Saltsburg, Pa., was given 201 first place votes out of 525 ballots cast by sports leaders throughout the country.

Harrison Dillard, the great Negro sprinter and hurdler who won the Olympic 100 meters at London, placed second to Mathias with 119 first place votes. Dillard also ran second last year, when the award went to Jack Kelly, the Philadelphia sculler.

Swimmer Verdeur Third

Third in the voting was Joe Verdeur, Olympic breaststroke swimming champion from Philadelphia, chosen by 77 selectors; fourth, Henry Wittenberg, New York City's peerless wrestler, who won the Olympic 175-pound title, 64 votes; fifth, Bob Kurland, towering center of the Phillips Basketball Oilers, 36 votes, and Mrs. Alline Banks Sprouse of Atlanta, the nation's leading women's basketball star, 28 votes.

Only the six candidates were on the ballot submitted to the selectors after the field had been sifted by the Sullivan award committee at the annual meeting of the Amateur Athletic Union here.

On a 5-3-1 tally of first, second and third place votes, Mathias received 1491 points, Dillard 1087, Verdeur 749, Wittenberg 629, Kurland 392 and Mrs. Sprouse 301.

The trophy will be presented to Mathias at a luncheon here on February 20, the day after the National AAU indoor championships at Madison Square Garden, in which the California phenom may be a competitor.

In citing Mathias for the award, the AAU said:

Needless to Say Nead Wins Again

Wilbur Nead won his 116th straight wrestling match last night at Turner's Arena when his opponent, Michele Leone, was disqualified for uncouth conduct.

George Macricostas and Marvin Mercer defeated Pat Welsh and Dapper Diz in the team match. In the two prelims, Harry Armus threw Stan Novak and Bibber McCoy drew with Dutch Schweigert.

Comets Triumph In Junior League

All three divisions of the Georgetown branch, Boys Club of Washington Basketball League saw action last night. The Comets whipped the Speedsters in the Junior League, 34-13; Peoples Drug defeated the Little Generals, 52-48, in the Intermediates; and Wilson AC of the Senior League blasted May Hardware, 53-29. Steve Karpman of Peoples was high man for the evening with 22 points.

DeMatha Romps

Freddy Richardson's 23 points paced the visiting DeMatha Catholic High's basketball team to a 41-24 victory over Kendall last night. DeMatha, en route to its seventh victory in 13 starts, held a 20-11 lead at halftime.

Villanova Denies Playing Dirty Football Against Nevada

At TD Banquet

Even Harry Should See Plenty Celebs

HARRY WISMER, the megaphone boy who spices his broadcasts of Redskin games with pithy little travelogues and homey celebrity gossip, will be in his glory Saturday night at the Statler Hotel where the Touchdown Club is holding its annual dinner.

Harry will be simply bathing in celebrities. Besides all those famous football players who are due to receive awards, the speakers' slate lists such gems as Adm. Bull Halsey, Justice William Douglas, of the United States Supreme Court, Jennings Randolph and Jimmy Conzelman. Harry, the master of ceremonies, will introduce them all, and will take over when time is out in the field of oratory.

Stop Scallion!

Gallaudet College, having hammered out its first basketball victory over Wilson Teachers College, girds for the invasion of Washington College tomorrow night. The invaders have split two games this season. Pregame interest center's on Washington's freshman find, Nick Scallion, who's racked up 32 points in the two games.

Hoya Frosh Drub Marines

Georgetown University's freshman basketball team put on a fourth-period spurt to down the Headquarters Marines, 77-59 last night at Henderson Hall.

The Frosh surge, depending almost entirely on set shots, came all the way from the short end of a 34-33 halftime score. Joe Ligrelli led the Frosh with 19 points;

'Cats Say Films Bear Them Out

Green River, Wyo., Jan. 5—(AP). Villanova College players, snowbound here on their way from the Harbor Bowl, scoffed today at reports they played dirty football in their New Year's Day game with Nevada.

Jerry Neri, John McKenna and Art Raimo, assistant Wildcat coaches, spoke for the players and Coach Jordan Olivar who is attending a meeting of the National Collegiate Athletic Association in San Francisco. They said:

"Officials of the Harbor Bowl were members of the Western Conference officiating division. None was an Easterner. It stands to reason that if there were any infractions of the rules they would have called them.

"We had movies taken of the game and we would like to go over them with Nevada players and coaches and have them point out where we did anything wrong.

"Villanova perfected a defense against passes that was new to Nevada. It is a system employed by pro football teams. We managed to take care of Nevada receivers before they could get out and Stan Heath, Nevada's great passer, couldn't connect."

Nevada's Coach Joe Sheeketski called the officiating at the contest "the poorest, the lousiest, I have ever seen in my career in football."

Raimo said that Sheeketski is "peeved now" and quoted the coach whose team lost, 27-7, to the Wildcats as saying after the game that the better team won.

"Take the two men they had injured," Raimo said. "Heath hurt himself putting a block on Danny Brown and Sherwood Howard had his head cut on a legitimate head-on tackle.

'Fix' Foursome May Be Front for Big Syndicate

phone call from Aronowitz at his Brooklyn home. At that time Aronowitz allegedly told him that he could make some money through his position as cocaptain of the team.

Immediately suspicious, Shapiro went to the District Attorney's office the next day.

Thereafter was held an amazing series of meetings between Aronowitz and Shapiro at which they discussed ways and means of throwing the games. Always nearby, usually within hearing range, was a detective from Hogan's office.

Aronowitz, who later brought the other men around to the meetings, made various proposals, Shapiro said, but he managed to keep fending them off, telling them the time was not ripe.

He Stalled Them

Actually, according to the District Attorney, Shapiro managed to hold them off until George Washington made its appearance in New York. Here any "fix" attempts would be under the jurisdiction of local police, and under a section of the penal code which was amended after the 1945 Brooklyn College basketball scandal, fixers would be liable to five-year prison sentences if found guilty.

Scotti, at the arraignment hearing, charged that the men "brazenly sought to corrupt and pollute a young athlete and a sport just so they could bet on a sure thing."

That inside operations were being attempted on last night's game was apparent earlier in the day when Manhattan, a 7-point favorite, suddenly jumped to 11 points in local and New Jersey betting establishments. Suddenly and inexplicably the odds tumbled to even money and when it looked as if George Washington might become the favorite, the bet takers took the game off their books.

It seemed probable that gamblers, who had bet heavily on Manhattan, assuming a "fix was in progress, suddenly learned that the whole thing was off and had hedged their money with late bets on George Washington.

In 1945, Harvey Stemmer and Henry Rosen, both of Brooklyn, were convicted on charges of trying to bribe five Brooklyn College basketball players to "throw" a game against Akron, Ohio, University in Boston. The game never was played.

Stemmer also became involved in the second scandal, which occurred in pro football. Out on parole, he and Alvin Paris, a bookmaker, sought to "fix" the outcome of the National League championship pro football game between the New York Giants and the Chicago Bears. Two backfield men, Frankie Filchock and Merle Hapes, both of whom were barred from pro football, were approached by the gamblers and urged to "fix" the game.

Paging Diogenes: Here's Your Man

Maj. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant 3d, George Washington U.'s vice president, reached all the way back to Greek mythology to praise basketball player Dave Shapiro, who exposed an attempted bribe in New York.

"Diogenes, who is reputed to have spent much time looking for an honest man, can now extinguish his lantern," General Grant said. "The honest man has been found, Dave Shapiro, a student of George Washington University."

Federal Bribe Bill Drawn Up By Hebert

sports leaders.

The bill died in committee—Hebert explained that it was a little tough for a Democrat to get much Republican support in the Eightieth Congress. However, Hebert was instrumental in getting a similar bill passed in the District of Columbia. Last year, largely at his instigation, the Louisiana State Legislature passed a measure specifically punishing any bribe attempts of athletes, coaches or officials of sports events.

One of the first to comment favorably on the intent of Hebert's bill was Senator Andrew F. Schoeppel (D., Kans.), who received All-America mention when he played on the great 1922 Nebraska team that defeated Notre Dame and its Four Horsemen.

"Sports of all kinds have the confidence of the public because they are clean," said Sen. Schoeppel. "I'll stand behind anything that will further keeping them that way. If it takes legislation, I'll look with favor upon it."

Rep. Chester A. Chesney, 32, was a member of the Chicago Bears before the war interrupted his football career. Chesney, a guard who took part in the 73-0 rout of the Washington Redskins here, said, "I'd support this bill any time. Something should be done to protect athletes from being approached by the shady boys. Sports must be kept clean."

Representative Sidney R. Yates, 39, former All Big Ten basketball star at the U. of Chicago, who received All-America court mention in 1931, put it this way:

"I'm not used to being a Congressman and making statements, but I'm certainly against any defilement of sports. And I'm for prompt and full punishment for those who would tamper with athletes.

Who Is This Dave Shapiro? Take a Look at a Modest Boy remembered yesterday that they knew very little about the guy, except maybe that they liked him.

Like the four battle stars Dave won in Europe during the war. How'd he get them?

"I think he was a captain, or maybe a lieutenant in the Air Force over there," offered Jim Leavy somewhat dubiously. Leavy is Dave's closest fraternity brother over at the Phi Alpha house.

ART CERRA, Dave's roommate at the varsity house, had another version. "Naw, never got higher than a sergeant. I think he was a French interpreter in Belgium." Publicity Director Tom Coleman's brochure simply says, "Private, First Class."

Before that the record gets even hazier. "Dave never played any high school ball—I remember asking him about it once. He must have played a little with City College and that's how George Washington got wind of him," was Leavy's contribution on that score. Coleman's handy little folder insists that Shapiro was an all-scholastic basketball player for Eastern District High School in Brooklyn.

What kind of a scholar is the 25-year-old, well built 6-footer? The consensus seems to be that he was a solid man in the classroom but seemed to have gotten kind of shaky this past semester. Acted like he had something on his mind, the boys said. Like the plush $1000 offer to throw a ball game, perhaps.

NOTHING to worry about, though. He's still got a good High "C" average in his second year of law school and expects to get his law degree in 1950. Dave's membership in Omicron Delta Kappa, the mens' leadership fraternity, represents in part, a reward for classroom achievement.

On the basketball court, our man is consistent, also. You'll never see him up there with the leading scorers. He's the feeder, the back court man who took only two shots Tuesday night in Madison Square Garden.

One thing Cerra and Leavy and all the rest of Dave's buddies are certain of—"Dave's a modest guy."

be directed toward the stage instead of the bar. The young law student must have done an elegant job of dissembling, even granting that his audience's critical faculties were dulled by greed.

Late changes in the betting line on the George Washington-Manhattan game suggest that a considerable flood of bets may have come in on the "sure thing." At the outset, Manhattan was reported as the favorite by 7 or 7½ points. By the time the game started, the spread had gone to 13 points. It shows how the word always gets around.

The punks thought they had it rigged for George Washington to lose by 18 points. The fact that George Washington brought off an upset and won, 71 to 63, is especially gratifying for it prevented the fixers from making a score that would furnish them with a defense fund.

4 New Democrats Assigned to Senate Civil Service Group

The new Democratic members of the Senate Civil Service Committee are: BROUGHTON of North Carolina, LONG of Louisiana, NEELY of West Virginia, and FREAR of Delaware.

As expected, JOHNSTON of South Carolina, is chairman, and McKELLAR of Tennessee and O'CONOR of Maryland, are the holdover Democrats on the committee. The Republicans have six seats on the committee.

Oddly enough, Neely returns to the committee post he held 10 years ago. At that time he showed an active interest in Civil Service problems and he could always be depended on to be on the liberal side in dealing with Federal workers.

On the GOP side, retiring Chairman LANGER will remain and he'll team up with Johnston in sponsoring employe reforms. Johnston is working on bills to raise Federal salaries a flat $650 a year and to further liberalize the Civil Service retirement system. No changes in membership on the GOP side are indicated.

PAY RAISES for top Federal executives, classified District employes and foreign service personnel are provided for in the Administration-supported "emergency" bill introduced yesterday in both the Senate and the House.

In the Senate, Lucas (D., Ill.), O'Conor (D., Md.), Flanders (R., Vt.) and Baldwin (R., Conn.) not only joined in sponsoring the measure but they issued a strong statement in which they urged their colleagues to take immediate action on it. It's reported that the skids are greased for the bill's approval next week in the Senate.

In the House, the legislation was sponsored by Miller (D., Calif.) and it's likely that several other House leaders will join him on the project. Democratic leaders are solid for it but there seems to be some doubt whether the House will approve it as written before January 20.

The bill would give substantial pay boosts to 200-odd top Federal executives, including the President, and $330 flat increases retroactive to last July to the District and foreign service employes. On both sides of Capitol Hill attempts are being made to get the bill amended to include pay raises for members of Congress—increases that can be easily justified.

SIGNPOSTS: On the subject of pay, the military officers are hoping the President will urge Congress to give them increases, too. Twenty years ago, remember, the wives of generals and admirals were among the social leaders. But times change. During the recent Christmas rush in one department store here the wives of six generals and numerous colonels and majors were working as extras to earn needed money.

STORY: Over at the Postoffice Department yesterday I found a CAF-4 clerk who could do wonders with his paycheck—at the expense of Government Services. The young man limited himself to a sandwich and cup of coffee for lunch. The bill was usually 20 cents as he chose a 15-cent sandwich.

Now he has cut his lunch bill in about half and he has a better lunch. This is his secret: he buys a hard roll (3 cents), a slice of cheese (3 cents) and he takes generous helping of either mustard or relish (free). With the coffee, his lunch bill is now 11 cents.

SAM RAYBURN will have served as Speaker of the House longer than anyone else when he completes his present two-year term . . . SENATOR DOWNEY (D., Calif.) yesterday put in a bill that should be passed. The measure would make the Government pay the premiums on surety bonds it requires thousands of employes who handle money to take out. Downey estimates the bonds cost the employes upwards of $1,500,000 a year.

CAPITOL guards have been alerted to keep unauthorized people from the House floor. It woman who claims she was a newly elected member was on the floor during the opening session. She was turned over to the police by several members who became suspicious when she protested to them that her name hadn't been called. It seems that the woman had run for Congress in New York and had been defeated.

GPO: The Government Printing Office has followed its established custom by giving pay raises to its laborers, helpers and other per diem workers outside of the crafts. The raises average 10 per cent. It follows an average increase of 11 per cent for the craft employes.

MESSAGE: The President made no direct reference to Federal workers in his state of the Union message yesterday to Congress. But Government people would have more work to do and their number would have to be increased again if Congress approved all of the President's plans. All the new and expanded activities proposed by Mr. Truman would take more employe hands.

The President called for a rebuilt Labor Department without specifying which agencies he believed should be in it. He asked Cabinet status for the Federal Security Agency, and the Government housing agencies would have to be expanded to encourage the production of a million housing units a year.

Accused as Shoplifter, Woman Blames Dope

SHOP-LIFTED PLUNDER—A detective looks over clothing allegedly taken from Washington shops by a brooding young mother

By Alfred E. Lewis and John London
Post Reporters

Dazed but coherent, a modish young mother told police yesterday that dope was the only accomplice her nimble fingers needed to lift $10,000 in loot from smart Washington shops.

Though unsteady on her feet, Mrs. Sylvia Schildhaus, 29, a convicted check forger on probation, coolly helped store detectives and representatives from nine firms identify her choice plunder, spread out at police headquarters.

"I wanted to get money to buy my mother a decent tombstone," she sighed, when asked what touched off her two-month shoplifting spree just before Christmas. She said she had brooded over her mother's death the past year.

Another reason she gave was that she needed money to visit her mother-in-law in New York whom she has never seen. Her husband, a 25-year-old unemployed hair stylist, who looks like a college student, has not been implicated in the thefts, police said.

"Once I got started," she observed, "I couldn't stop. There were so many attractive things in the stores."

As for courage, she said, "When you're doped you can do anything."

Explaining the art of lifting a dress, as taught to her by a girl friend, a fellow narcotic, she told police:

"I'd take a dress off the rack, look at it, then place it on a chair. Then, I'd walk off, and when no one was watching, return and slip it into my shopping bag, or under my dress, or between my coat and dress."

Mrs. Schildhaus pointed out two foot-wide shopping bags she had knitted herself to assist her in her trade.

A "customer" led police Tuesday to the booty which flooded her three-room apartment at 411 2d st. se.

The merchandise, including clothes, choice glassware, perfumes, lighters, jewelry, hats, Chinese figurines, clocks and silverware, all bore original store price tags. Mrs. Schildhaus explained she "wanted friends to know what they were buying."

She had kept most of the loot, awaiting the expiration of a six-year probationary period imposed on her in 1943 for passing $18,000 in bad checks. She was tried as Mrs. Sylvia Bowlby, along with an Andrew Le Bolo.

Mrs. Schildhaus said she had hoped to unload her merchandise when the probationary period was up in four months.

Arraigned before United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence on a charge of grand larceny involving one $384 coat stolen from Garfinckel's she was released under $1500 bond. The case was continued until January 27 so she can get a lawyer.

Police said they only placed one theft charge against her pending identification of all merchandise. Garfinckel's alone estimated that recovered merchandise stolen from their store exceeded $6000, police said.

Police said the narcotics were obtained on the prescription of a Washington physician.

Meeting Set On Bar Hours For Inaugural

The District Commissioners and members of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board will meet today to discuss extension of Washington's official drinking hours during Inauguration Week.

This was indicated yesterday after three men, representing a group of 25 large restaurateurs, called upon the District ABC Board for permission to extend their bar closings to 4 a. m. from January 17 through January 21.

ABC Board Chairman Alan W. Payne said both he and James O'D. Moran, another member of the board, had indicated their willingness to make the temporary hour setback. However, Payne explained, the final decision is up to the District Commissioners, who must formally change the regulations and advertise the proposed extension in the press for five days before it becomes effective.

Present District regulations do not permit sale of alcoholic beverages after 2 a. m. at Washington entertainment spots.

The delegation of restaurateurs explained that they feared they would "lose out" on inaugural crowds to the "private" after-hour clubs. They said they had been informed that proprietors of these clubs are making elaborate preparations to handle out-of-town guests.

One of these preparations, they stated, is distribution of temporary membership cards in their clubs to cab drivers, with the understanding the drivers will steer visitors to the clubs.

Officials in the Hack Inspector's Office said yesterday they had not been informed of this practice. They pointed out, however, that a cab driver does not violate the law if he complies with the request of a fare by "steering" him to such a club. The cab driver is in violation of the law only if he volunteers such information, it was said.

The restaurateurs contended that allowing them to extend their entertainment hours actually would be a public service, and would prevent "gouging" by the private clubs.

Bratburd Is Convicted On Lottery Charges

Eddie Bratburd, 50, of 8869 Piney Branch rd., Takoma Park, was convicted in Montgomery County Circuit Court yesterday of lottery charges, was given a six-month jail term and ordered to pay a $1000 fine.

His attorney, Joseph B. Simpson, jr., of Rockville, immediately appealed the conviction, and Bratburd was released under $2000 bond. Bratburd was arrested last July 8 by Montgomery County detectives who said they found 215 numbers slips and $348 in cash in his car.

Hall Pleads Self-Defense In Slaying

3-Judge Tribunal Told He Killed Policeman After Blackjack Attack

By Howard L. Dutkin
Post Reporter

Thomas Hall, raw-boned, 6-foot 5-inch stoneyard laborer, yesterday told a three-judge tribunal in Upper Marlboro, Md., that he shot and killed Prince Georges Police Pvt. Charles L. Caldwell last June 12 in self-defense.

"He hit me across the head with his blackjack and I was pretty dizzy and I was mad and I just began shooting and Baker (Pvt. Wallace Baker, Caldwell's buddy who was wounded in the affray) was shooting at me," the defendant asserted on the witness stand.

Hall is charged with first-degree murder as a result of the shooting which followed a disturbance report at the Hall home, 5312 Maple rd., Deanwood.

Called on Knifing Report

Caldwell and Baker had gone to the Hall home to investigate a reported knifing of another man by Hall's 20-year-old daughter, Janie.

As the policeman, accompanied by Janie and Hall, returned to their police car, a scuffle broke out resulting in the slaying of Caldwell with his own pistol and the wounding of Baker and Hall.

Yesterday Hall contradicted previous testimony by Baker that he had threatened the policemen. The defendant declared he followed the policemen and his daughter out of the house voluntarily when he noticed the girl struggling with the officers.

"I hollered at her," he testified, "and I said 'don't start that foolishness. Go along with the police. You ought to be ashamed of yourself.'"

He said he didn't get "too close to the policemen because I was afraid they'd say I was interfering. No one made any attempt to arrest me because I hadn't done anything," he declared.

Denied Cursing Policeman

Hall denied cursing the policemen and declared "there is not a word of truth" to Baker's testimony.

(Baker had told the court Tuesday that Hall had cursed and threatened them and finally attacked Caldwell.)

The defendant declared the officers placed Janie in the car and that he stood to one side offering no protest.

Then, Hall said, in a drawl that made him difficult to understand, "the big police (Caldwell) looked at me and said 'Goddam you, I'm going to lock you up, too' and hauled away and hit me twice with a blackjack."

At this point upon direction of his counsel, J. Frank Lillard, jr., Hall showed the three judges two scars on his head. A hospital record also was shown attesting that Hall had been treated for a gunshot wound and head lacerations on June 12.

"I grabbed him," Hall continued, "and he yelled for Baker to get his gun."

The defendant then said Baker started firing and that he (Hall) grabbed Caldwell's pistol and started shooting. He admitted shooting Caldwell three times.

Denies He Followed Baker

The witness denied he followed Baker into the police car after the first shots and attempted to shoot the latter in the head.

Earlier two statements allegedly made by Hall to police were admitted to evidence. In the first one, made the night of the shooting, guilt was denied. The second statement, dated June 16, followed in most respects Hall's testimony.

Before Hall testified, the court heard testimony from Charles Digges Markham, who lived at the Hall home, to the effect that he saw Caldwell slug Hall with a blackjack just before the shooting.

Janie Hall, currently under murder indictment stemming from the same affray, has been granted a change of venue and will be tried in Anne Arundel County.

Following yesterday's testimony, both prosecution and defense rested. They will sum up today at 10 a. m.

Sightless Man Is Pedestrian Of the Week

The "Pedestrian of the Week"—the person who used most caution in crossing the street over the New Year weekend—is a blind man.

He was honored yesterday at ceremonies at No. 13 Police Precinct stationhouse with a trophy cup and other awards made by the Commissioners' Traffic Advisory Board and Metropolitan Police Traffic Division.

The pedestrian, Joseph Fred Dade, 52, of 1723 11th st. nw, who is unemployed, lost his eyesight 12 years ago. He attracted the attention of Police Pvt. Carlton G. Thomas because he blew a whistle before attempting to cross 14th and U sts. nw.

Private Thomas said Dade "blew several blasts on a whistle he always carries" before he attempted to cross, and asked those near him to help him cross "when the light turns green."

Hunt Children Said to Have Rare Disease

County Official Explains Plight of 'Starving' Pair

Two young Huntsville, Md., children, thought at first to be starving, actually are suffering from a rare disease for which there is no known cure, it was learned last night.

Clara Hunt

The children, Marie Louise Hunt, 6, and her brother Lawrence Eugene, 11, were taken to Prince George's General Hospital Tuesday. They have been bedridden since birth, unable to walk or talk, and are undeveloped physically and mentally as a result of the disease, it was reported.

Miss E. Susan Hendricks, head of the county welfare board, said the mother, Clara Hunt, had received county aid since 1940 to care for the children. She declared a personal investigation had convinced her that the mother had been doing everything to care for the undeveloped boy and girl.

Both children have been examined by several physicians, she said, and had been examined at a Johns Hopkins University clinic.

County relief of $30.45 a month has been administered on the basis of the medical prognosis, Miss Hendricks said, which offered little hope that the children would live more than a few years.

Case records are filled with notes by social workers since 1940 showing that the mother had been giving the children optimum care, Miss Hendricks said.

Miss Hendricks said that unsuccessful efforts had been made to place the children in an institution. "The children actually require 24-hour care," she said, "but the mother has been devoting her entire life to them, according to all the information that we can get."

The mother called hospital authorities Tuesday when she noticed that her daughter was less interested in food than ever, and seemed unusually sick.

Miss Hendricks did not know the medical term for the disease from which the children are suffering, but said it rendered them "seriously disabled," uninterested in food, and without physical control.

After inspecting the house in which the children lived, a five-room two-story building on Sheriff rd., extended, Miss Hendricks described it as "clean, airy and sanitary." She said she found orange juice, jars of baby food, and a well-stocked ice box when she visited the place.

She was convinced the stage had not been set for her, she explained, since no one knew that she was going to visit the house with a public health nurse and a social worker.

Meanwhile, on the basis of early reports of the case which indicated parental neglect and county inefficiency, Governor Lane of Maryland, yesterday launched his own investigation.

D. C. Employes Advised Of Right to Unionize

District Commissioners have informed department heads that District government employes may "affiliate or not, at their election, with any employe organization or association" provided they are not forced to strike against the Government and that they not join groups advocating overthrow of the constitutional form of Government.

The statement was made after J. G. Yaden, national president, American Federation of Government Employes (AFL), asked the Commissioners to advise District employes they had no objection to the employes joining the union. Yaden disclosed earlier that the group will attempt to organize a unit in the District government.

Keleher Found Wearing Shorts, Mrs. Blake a Gown, Court Told

Two private investigators yesterday related in District Court how they found John B. Keleher in his shorts and Mrs. Dorothy Blake in her nightgown in connecting rooms in a swank Atlantic City hotel at 1:30 in the morning.

The investigators, Harold H. Gray and Earl H. Dobbins, testified they visited the rooms in the Marlborough Hotel early on the morning of September 21, 1946, in company with Mrs. Anna T. Keleher, who had sworn out a warrant charging the couple with adultery.

Mrs. Keleher, 51, is suing her husband, 67, a once-convicted Washington gambler, for a limited divorce on grounds of cruelty. He is countersuing her for a limited divorce on the same grounds. In addition, Mrs. Keleher has a $250,000 alienation of affections suit pending against Mrs. Blake, who is 44.

Gray declared that the hotel's night manager accompanied him, Dobbins and Mrs. Keleher to her husband's hotel room but that Keleher refused to open the door when they identified themselves and, instead, called the hotel desk to verify they were there.

"There was scuffling inside and I could hear the door between the two rooms close while he was telephoning," Gray said.

Keleher Makes Appearance

Keleher finally came out into the hall in his shorts, Gray testified, adding, "I think they were blue."

When Keleher saw his wife in the hall, he started toward her, declaring: "G— d—, I'll get you for this," the investigator said. "I had my man take Mrs. Keleher downstairs to avoid trouble," he added.

Gray said Mrs. Blake would not open her door until Keleher, after being shown the warrant, advised: "Dotty, you might as well open up." She came to the door then in her nightgown—"I think it was pink," he testified.

He said he drove Keleher and Mrs. Blake to the home of an Atlantic City judge, whom they got out of bed at 2 a. m. for a preliminary hearing, because "Mrs. Keleher didn't want them to have to spend the night in jail."

On the way to the judge's home, Mrs. Blake, who was very nervous stated: "Well, it had to happen sooner or later. All she wants is to get a lot of alimony. That's the only reason she's doing this," Gray testified.

After the preliminary hearing, he drove the couple back to the hotel, he said. The case was taken under advisement the next day by a Ventnor, N. J., magistrate, who eventually dismissed the charges against the couple, he testified.

Earlier in the day, Mrs. Keleher testified under cross-examination that when her husband returned to Washington from a visit in Florida in February, 1946, she met him at Union Station to give him his overcoat and to tell her she was through.

"But I never told him that he couldn't come home," she added.

She said she took two private investigators to the station with her because "I was afraid he would molest me. He had threatened me."

Statement Reiterated

When the two investigators saw her, however, they refused to represent her because they had once been employed by Keleher, she declared, adding that she had to "rely on Union Station policemen for protection."

Mrs. Keleher reiterated the statement she made Tuesday at the trial before Judge Edward Tamm, that she had removed about $31,000 or $32,000 from safe deposit boxes here on January 31, 1946, while Keleher was in Florida. She continued insisting that she had used the money to make bets for him but had lost it all.

She agreed that two fur coats, a fox jacket costing $1936, and a silver mink costing $5041, were sent to her but charged to him the same month she took the cash from the safe deposit boxes.

"They were ordered the October before for my birthday. Sure, I charged them to him, just like I had been charging everything for the last 15 years," she declared. He eventually had to pay for the coats when the fur stores threatened to sue both of them, she added.

She also admitted that in 1947 he purchased back from her, for approximately $4000, a town car, which he had given her as a Christmas present in 1941.

Lock Cylinder Changed

She denied that she changed the lock on her apartment door at the Woodley-Park Towers to keep him out at the time she took the money from the safety vaults.

"I had only the cylinder on it changed because it wouldn't work right. He was always complaining because it wouldn't work," she stated.

On the other hand, she declared, he had locked her out of the apartment a short time after he had returned from Florida, although he soon gave her the key.

"He wasn't concerned then about me, only about losing the money," she remarked bitterly, after admitting that she had finally told him at that time about taking it from the safe deposit boxes a month earlier.

Mrs. Keleher said that since she and her husband separated in the early part of 1946 she had disposed of the $31,000 and had incurred debts up to approximately $80,000, which she cannot now pay.

Whisky Raffle at Dance Leads To Four Convictions, Fines

Four men were convicted and fined yesterday in District Court for holding a whisky raffle.

The charges grew out of a 35-man police raid October 10 on a dance held in Laborer's Hall, 523-525 New Jersey ave. nw., and sponsored by members of the United Negro and Allied Veterans of America and Veterans for Wallace.

Fined $50 were Winston C. Edwards, 30, 2914 Sherman ave. nw., Sidney Goldreich, 25, of 3812 Florence dr., Alexandria; and Edmund S. Majchrzyk, 24, of 516 2nd st. nw. A $25 fine was imposed on Frank E. Trusclair, 27, of 2911 Sherman ave. nw. The judge was Edward M. Curran.

The prizes of the thwarted raffle, police said, were a fifth of bourbon, a fifth of scotch, and a recording of "Freedom Train" by Paul Robeson. Chances were 25 cents each and were purchased by police as well as the participants in the dance, according to testimony.

Police said that $19.70 was seized at the dance. However, Edwards testified that two hours before the raid he counted $200 or more in receipts.

"I am wondering what happened to the money," Edwards said.

Defense Attorney Charles H. Houston argued that the raffle was not a commercial transaction but was for a "cause" and said it was akin to the situation at church bazaars and fairs where contributions are requested. He said criminal intent was absent.

The prosecutor, Arthur McLaughlin, said the group was acting in open defiance of the law.

Optimists Give Boys' Clubs $2175

A check for $2175, part of an annual donation to the two local Boys' Clubs of America, was presented yesterday by the National Capital Optimists Club at a luncheon at the Continental Hotel.

Presentation was made by Dr. Alfred G. McDonald, club treasurer, to Gus Mascaro, administrator of the Southeast Branch Boys' Club. The Georgetown Branch Boys' Club also will benefit from the money, which will be used to maintain such youth activities as crafts and musical instruction.

Income Tax Plans to Be Studied by D. C. Heads

Basic Exemption For Proposed City Levy May Be Reduced to $5000

District Commissioners will meet Friday morning to consider previously announced plans for reduced exemptions in the proposed income tax and unincorporated business tax.

The proposals were drafted last month by Tax Assessor Edward A. Dent in cooperation with Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler and Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West. They propose:

1. Reduction of the basic exemption in the proposed income tax revision from $8000 to $5000 a year.

2. Reduction of the present $10,000 exemption in the unincorporated business tax to $5000.

Hinged to Sales Tax

The income tax changes would sales tax measur and would be insales tax measure and would be intended to offset hardship on lower income groups, according to the three advisers.

Last year when a sales tax law coupled with a cut in income tax was disclosed, the basic exemption mentioned was $8000. This time, however, the District leaders feel the city's needs require limiting such exemption to $5000.

The only present exemptions are $1000 each for a husband and wife and $500 for each dependent. A 1 per cent tax is assessed on the next $5000 income and a 1½ per cent tax on the second $5000.

Under the proposed law, the first $5000 would be exempt and a 1½ per cent tax would be placed on the second $5000. The legislation also would eliminate a clause exempting the salaries of most Government workers from the District income tax.

Second Revenue Raising Bill

The change in the unincorporated business tax involves a second revenue raising bill. At present a tax is levied on all unincorporated businesses making more than $10,000 a year. The proposed law would lower this exemption to $5000, thus bringing in additional funds for the District coffers.

Another proposed change involves the District franchise tax which at present places no limit on the amount of deduction that can be taken for salaries of the proprietor or partners in a business. The new bill would limit the salary deduction to 20 per cent of the business' net income.

Bill to Transfer Gallinger Land Being Drafted

District budget officials are drafting an item in a deficiency bill to be laid before Congress covering transfer of Gallinger Hospital land from the Federal to the District government so it may receive Federal hospital funds.

Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West said the District cannot qualify for $525,000 from the Hill-Burton Act fund scheduled for use on a new pediatrics and crippled children's building at Gallinger because applicants are required to own construction sites in order to qualify for the Federal aid.

District Commissioners have approved the plan and directed Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler and his aides to include it in the first deficiency bill to go up to Capitol Hill. If Congress fails to approve such a transfer, the alternative will be to ask Congress to include the funds in the District budget.

The Commissioners have already approved preliminary designs for the two-million dollar structure. It will contain two wings with a capacity of 125 beds and provision for addition later of a second upper section which would raise the bed number to 300.

Birth of Cubs Belies Bears' Sterility

Two supposedly sterile hybrid bears have astounded the zoological world by producing twins at the National Zoological Park, it was announced yesterday by Director William A. Mann.

The new arrivals are not expected to live, but their parents, which were produced by the first successful mating of an Alakan Kodiak and a polar bear, were also given no chance of survival when they were born 12 years ago.

Dr. Mann considers the birth as significant as if two mules had produced an offspring.

The two new cubs, which weigh an estimated 16 ounces apiece against their parents' 1100 pounds, have not yet actually been seen by Dr. Mann or his associates. Although their birth is definitely known from animal noises, the cubs are deep inside the bears' den, well beyond the eyes and reach of man.

The Zoological Park's experiment in bear genetics began by mistake in 1936, Dr. Mann said, when Ramona, a Kodiak bear from Alaska, produced four cubs sired by Snowy, a polar bear. That birth was considered a freak by zoologists because the two species of bear are found thousands of miles apart. One of the cubs died soon after birth.

Then in 1939 Ramona and Snowy produced another pair of hybrids, only one of which lived. Zoologists agreed that all four of the surviving hybrids, which were the only ones in captivity, would be sterile, incapable of reproduction.

Low Bid for School

A low bid of $642,632 for construction of the Walker-Jones Elementary School, 1st and L sts. nw., was submitted yesterday by E. L. Daniels, general contractor, of 2112 North Quincy st., Arlington.

Bids of six contractors on the three-story brick building were opened in the District Building. The structure will contain 24 classrooms and an assembly hall-gymnasium. It will replace two eight-classroom buildings, the Walker, 3d and K sts. nw., and the Jones, 1st and L sts. nw.

Welfare Payment Bill

Legislation excusing District Public Welfare Department officials from financial responsibility for unjustified payments to relief claimants is being drafted by Assistant Corporation Counsel Irving Bryan for presentation to Congress.

The District Commissioners have approved the bill in principle, according to Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West. The bill is the outgrowth of an investigation by Auditor A. R. Pilkerton of alleged illegal payments to relief clients who were not eligible for such aid.

Fire Alarm False, Late

Mrs. Pauline Deskins, 42, of 921 27th st. nw., was placed on six month's probation yesterday in Municipal Court after she was convicted of turning in a false alarm Tuesday.

According to testimony, Mrs. Deskins called the Fire Department after the wind turned back part of her tin roof and the rain began pouring through.

Police said, however, the roof was damaged Friday and that she didn't bother to call the Fire Department until it started to rain.

15 Denied U. S. Pay Hike

Fifteen civilian employes of the District National Guard were not entitled to the $330 a year raise granted to Federal workers, according to a ruling of the Comptroller General's office.

District Auditor A. R. Pilkerton, who made the ruling public, said his office had earlier advised guard officials that the workers were part of the District government, and therefore not entitled to the pay boost.

Geographical Mixup

A police radio dispatcher for the Montgomery County police force yesterday thought he was hearing double. When Dispatcher Jack Wilton called for Car 26 to come in, Car 26 answered promptly.

But the officer in the car failed to recognize the specified address.

An explanation was soon forthcoming. "I'm in the State of Washington," the voice said.

Wilton inquired what frequency the caller was on. The reply was 3700 kilocycles. The Montgomery County station at Rockville is on 37.1 kilocycles, Wilton said.

Fire Empties School

School was let out early yesterday at Clara Barton Elementary, 7425 MacArthur blvd., when a small fire broke out in a closet. The school's 418 pupils marched outside without confusion to stand in the pouring rain, school officials said. Firemen said damage was negligible.

Commission To Ask Bids On Lunchroom

District Commissioners are expected to ask for bids next week on the leasing of a Municipal Center room as an eating establishment, it was learned last night.

District license, health, legal, fire marshal and building inspection officials have approved use of Room 136 in the center, and Property Survey Officer Paul Chalupsky is preparing the bid specifications for submission to city heads.

The lunchroom will provide facilities for 48 standing patrons at a time and no table facilities, Chalusky said.

Bids will be asked on a one-year basis with a clause making the lease renewable on satisfactory service by the lessee, Chalupsky said.

Use of the room, formerly utilized for storage purposes, was first suggested by Police Superintendent Robert J. Barrett after the former lunchroom in the building was closed. The area previously occupied by the eating place will be used as a police pistol range, as originally intended.

Board Hears Case Against Realty Broker

An all-day hearing by the District Real Estate Commission yesterday on charges that a local real estate broker failed to promptly remit $486 collected in rents was continued to 9:30 a. m. today in the District Building.

William H. Sperling, 1713 M st. nw., denied charges that he had failed either to remit rents collected from a six-apartment building at 619 Otis pl. nw. or to make payments for services required by the structure. The building is owned by Mrs. Rosa Scott, 334 N. Patrick st., Alexandria.

Mrs. Scott told the three-man commission that after purchasing the structure through Sperling in April, 1948, she had made him rental agent for the property and directed him to submit monthly statements of rent collections and disbursements.

She learned later that bills for gas, coal, water and trash removal service were unpaid for several months.

Sperling confirmed the monthly statement arrangement, but said it ran into difficulty. He said a Negro tenant was moved into a vacant apartment and this resulted in nonpayment of rent by white families occupying the other units. For this reason, he arranged with James H. Raby, an Alexandria attorney, for submission of quarterly statements and payments, he testified.

Two such payments were made and a final settlement of the account was made last December 13, Sperling said. He admitted the latter was paid after a complaint was lodged with the Real Estate Commission. Checks were mailed to the trash and coal firms on December 15, he added.

Mrs. Henrietta Schmid

Mrs. Henrietta D. E. Schmid, 83, church worker and member of the Order of the Eastern Star for more than 30 years, died Tuesday at Leland Memorial Hospital in Riverdale, Md., after a long illness.

A native of Hamburg, Germany, Mrs. Schmid came to this country when she was 14 years old. She first settled in Rockville, Md., and later came to Washington, where she was married to the late Frank Schmid, a shop owner here. Recently she lived with a son at 4604 Oliver st., Riverdale, Md.

Mrs. Schmid was a member of the McKendree Methodist Church, 3309 South Dakota ave. ne., and the Washington Centennial Chapter No. 26, Order of the Eastern Star.

She is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Frances E. Allison, Colonial Beach, Va.; three sons, Henry F., George L. and Walter A. Schmid, all of Maryland; nine grandchildren and four great grandchildren.

Funeral services will be held at 2:30 p. m. Friday at Chambers funeral home, 5801 Cleveland ave., Riverdale, Md. Burial will be in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Acquitted in Numbers Case

Nathaniel Y. Taylor, 36, of 1450 Corcoran st. nw., was acquitted yesterday by Judge F. Dickinson Letts of District Court of numbers lottery charges.

Taylor was charged with operating a numbers lottery and possession of numbers slips. He was represented by Attorney Curtis Mitchell.

Youth Leader Assails Films' Liquor Appeal

The "liquor-soaked" motion picture industry and the "brown glass curtain" of the liquor industry were attacked by key speakers yesterday at the convention of the American Temperance Society in the Sligo Seventh Day Adventist Church in Takoma Park.

"Put your spirits in brown bottles because light hurts them," was described as the basic strategy of the liquor business by O. C. Christgau of Wells, Minn., field secretary of the Temperance League of America.

E. W. Dunbar, world youth leader for Seventh Day Adventists, told 150 convention delegates that 90 per cent of feature films contained liquor propaganda and called for an investigation of the Hollywood "liquor lobby."

The convention will close today with an address in Constitution Hall by Dr. George W. Crane, Northwestern University psychologist, at 7:30 p. m.

At an afternoon session of the convention yesterday, Dr. Haven Emerson, professor of public health at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, New York, discussed the medical knowledge of alcohol.

"Alcohol is a depressant, not a stimulant," he said, and even in small amounts it contributes to human inefficiency. Body reflexes are delayed from 5 to 10 per cent after doses of alcohol so small as to cause no obvious change, he said. This delay may mean death, he warned, when a car traveling 35 miles an hour must be stopped suddenly.

Other speakers at the windup session of the convention today include W. B. Ochs of Takoma Park, vice president of the General Conference of Seventh Day Adventists, who will speak on "The Need of the Hour"; Dr. Wayne MacFarland, editor of Life and Health magazine; and Maj. Clayton Wallace of Washington, superintendent of the Temperance League of America.

He also was credited with developing the "gold-colored glasses"—yellow glass covered with an extremely thin coating of gold—which are transparent, yet eliminate heat and glare from light. The glasses are used mostly by persons working near furnaces.

A former president of the American Optical Society, Dr. Pfund received the society's highest award, the Frederick Ives Medal, in 1939 for his work with infrared rays.

He was born in Madison, Wis., and graduated from the University of Wisconsin.

Rescue Missions Aid Storm Victims

Denver, Jan. 5 (AP).—Aerial and ground mercy missions brought relief today to thousands of travelers stranded for three days in blizzard-bruised Colorado and Wyoming.

The greatest rescue was at Rockport, Colo., nine miles south of the Wyoming line. Since Sunday 343 bus passengers and motorists had huddled in the village's lone tavern. Soup and coffee was their principal nourishment. Rescuers said nearly all were suffering from colds and undernourishment.

"It was like a snake pit," said John Gillies, 21, Chicago. "There wasn't a spare inch on the floor. Men and women slept fully clothed. People were lying in every conceivable position. Kids were crying."

Gillies said "all we didn't run short of was beer. It cost us 10 cents for a cup of coffee and 30 cents for a bowl of soup."

[At Washington, Red Cross headquarters reported some 50 persons blizzard-bound at Rockport are being evacuated to Greeley.]

Thirty-five children, the youngest 2 months old, were among the rescued. Snow blocked both front and back doors to the tavern. The only exit was through a broken window in the women's rest room.

Three Air Force planes from Lowry Base, Denver, flew over southern Wyoming and northern Colorado dropping food and blankets to isolated communities and stalled railroad trains.

Rotary plows chewed into 20-foot drifts along the Union Pacific in southern Wyoming where 18 trains are stranded with 2240 passengers. None are reported experiencing any severe hardships. Officials hoped to start moving some of the trains tonight.

Highway plows were slowly clearing major roads but there was still no surface travel in southeastern Wyoming and northeastern Colorado.

Clinic Opened For Spastic Children

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

First public step to uncover an estimated 150 spastic children of Montgomery County and guide them to useful lives was taken yesterday at the Silver Spring Health Center.

Occasion was the opening of a cerebral palsy clinic at 9100 Old Bladensburg rd., Silver Spring, Md.

The diagnostic clinic, sponsors said, was set up largely with the encouragement of the recently organized Cerebral Palsy Association of Montgomery County, comprising the parents of 13 spastic children of the area.

First-day activities were devoted to consultations with the parents and examination of the 13 children by Dr. Campbell C. McCullough, jr., Baltimore physician.

Also present were Dr. V. L. Ellicott, county health officer, and Dr. Harold H. Mitchell, county director of school health. It was Dr. Mitchell who estimated there are 150 children of school and preschool age in the county that are handicapped by cerebral palsy.

Majority Kept Hidden

The great majority of these, he said, are kept hidden even from their immediate neighbors by parents because of "unwarranted shame, ignorance, fear of ridicule, or false motives of protection."

Such children, commonly called spastics, are those suffering lack of muscular coordination through injury to motor areas of the brain. Comparatively recent studies and success of rehabilitation measures have proved spastics are otherwise mentally sound, and rate high in intelligence tests for their age groups.

Their affliction may show in as many multiple combinations as there are muscles in the body. Wrists, elbows or knees may be crooked beyond normal movement; heads may be canted, bodies twisted; facial muscles may flex spasmodically in uncontrollable grimaces, and muscles controlling speech are often involved.

Ages Range From 3 To 18

Those examined yesterday at the clinic ranged between 3 and 18 years of age, and showed varying degrees of the nerve and muscle disability. Most are being educated and undergoing treatments at great sacrifice of their parents, Dr. Mitchell said.

"These parents know they must help, not hide, their children," Dr. Mitchell said. "We can only hope their example will lead parents of other spastics to follow their steps."

Operation of the cerebral palsy clinic, Dr. Mitchell said, may be the preliminary step to inauguration of special classes for handicapped children in Montgomery County public schools.

The cause of cerebral palsy was once generally believed to be the result of a birth accident, and frequently blamed on the physician. Recent studies, however, have shown it may result from varied causes, including Rh-blood incompatibility of the parents.

Montgomery Facing 43% School Growth

Warning of a possible 43 per cent increase in school enrollment by 1953, Montgomery County School officials yesterday placed school construction needs at 20 million dollars during the next four years.

Of this amount, they said, 11 million dollars should be provided this year.

Admitting the requested amount is "staggering," officials cited the figures as "the minimum program that can be thought of, if the needs of our children are to be met."

Presently enrolled, according to the biennial school construction report made public yesterday, are 21,000 children. By 1953, the report stated, 9000 more may be booked.

"The public schools of Montgomery County are now seriously overcrowded, and have been able to continue on a full-time basis only because all available space has been used for class purposes," the report declared.

Classified as "critical" in the report were 169 elementary school classrooms. Carried as "essential" were 126 more elementary classrooms. Both categories would cost an estimated 17 million dollars, and the construction would provide, in addition, space for 2980 pupils in junior and senior high schools.

An estimated $696,780 is needed for acquisition of 32 new school sites and $1,342,110 for the reconditioning program, the report stated.

The report also calls for a separate school, costing about $200,000, for "unique children with unmet needs."

Listed as critical at the elementary school level were: Rockville Negro consolidated, $380,000; Viers Mill Village, $290,000; Somerset, $180,000; Whitehall Primary unit, $90,000; Rollingwood, $275,000; East-West Highway, $295,000; Piney Branch Road, $190,000; New Hampshire Avenue, $190,000; Flower Avenue, $80,000; Parkside, $60,000; Forest Grove, $80,000; Glen Haven, $190,000; Homewood, $365,000; new school southwest of Glenmont, $200,000; East Rockville, $290,000; Garrett Park, $145,000; Alta Vista, $85,000; Bradley, $230,000; Brookmont, $210,000; Lynnbrook, $110,000; Poolesville, $90,000; Damascus, $115,000; Gaithersburg, $60,000; Colesville, $100,000.

At the junior and senior high school level, the following were listed as critical: Western Junior, $800,000; Montgomery Hills Junior, $140,000; Kensington Junior, $200,000; Gaithersburg Junior, $750,000; Bethesda-Chevy Chase Senior, $1,330,000; Montgomery Blair Senior, $1,050,000; Damascus High, $145,000, and a new Negro high, $380,000.

The 129-page report, prepared by Richard Carpenter, assistant school superintendent, emphasized that largest increases in enrollment will occur in the elementary schools. However, "substantial" increases are also expected in county high schools, he warned.

Frost Damage 20 Millions

Los Angeles, Jan. 5 (AP).—A killing frost, the worst in southern California in 35 years, brought losses estimated today at 20 million dollars.

The Nation's pocketbooks quickly began to feel the chill as citrus prices started climbing.

One section alone, San Bernardino County, which accounts for about a fourth of California's citrus production, estimated an eight-million-dollar loss. County farm adviser Albert Salter, who said a third of the crop may be gone, added that growers had spent $2,250,000 in two nights of heating orchards with burning oil.

Citrus returns more than 100 million dollars to California growers each year. California's 13 million dollar cut-flower industry also was reported hard hit.

In Imperial County, at least a million-dollar loss was the estimate of the farm commissioner, with the winter tomato and pea crops heavy losers.

The California Fruit Growers' Exchaange reported oranges, lemons and grapefruit were up an average of 50 cents a box.

The exchange, which markets about 75 per cent of the California-Arizona citrus crop, said it had not withdrawn quotations on fruit en route to Eastern markets, but the smaller American Fruit Growers, Inc., canceled its quotations both on fruit en route and ready for shipment.

Residents for the second successive day read thermometers in the low twenties, found water pipes and auto radiators frozen, and slipped on icy pavements.

Agricultural inspectors seized 650 boxes of oranges en route to market in violation of laws against shipping frozen fruit.

At Glendora, sheriff's officers reported Oliver S. Powell, 53, despondent over loss of the crop from his 20-acre orange grove, inhaled cyanide and killed himself.

Group Given Until Feb. 21 to Buy Woodlawn

The Woodlawn Public Foundation, Inc., was given until February 21 yesterday to raise the money to buy, for a public shrine, the Woodlawn estate that George Washington gave to his adopted daughter, Nellie Custis, as a wedding present.

Sale of the estate, either to the foundation or to the Immaculate Heart of Mary Mission Society, Inc., which originally sought to buy it, had been previously set for January 3 and then postponed until yesterday.

Fairfax County Circuit Judge Paul E. Brown granted the continuance yesterday after learning that all parties to the action had agreed to it.

Elwood H. Seal, foundation trustee and former District corporation counsel, told Judge Brown the foundation has collected about $67,000 toward the $170,000 purchase price. This includes, he said, about $30,000 from the Old Dominion Foundation, which has agreed to match on a two-to-one basis up to $100,000 money collected after last December 20.

Traditionally the president of the Senate Ladies is the wife of th Vice President. But Alben Barkley is a widower—so what now? Why then the honor is conferred on the wife of the President Pro Tempor of the Senate. During the last Congress Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg was the capable and well-loved leader of senatorial wives. Her hus band—because there was no Vice President—was next in rank as th Senate's President Pro Tem.

But the picture changed in November when Democrats swept int both Senate and the House. Senator Kenneth McKellar is a Demo crat. He's also just been named President Pro Tem. And he's also a bachelor! So that puts the situation right back where it started from According to a Senator's wife who ought to know, it's just possible that the wife of the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee will find her name as a candidate. Anyway, February elections wil tell.

TOWN TOPICS: That little round mahogany table on which Presi dent Truman will take his oath of office stood for years in the old fashioned drawing room of the late Mr. and Mrs. Watson Freeman Clark's home on now unfashionable Fourth st. First Chief Executive to place his Bible on the table was President Lincoln. The line has remained unbroken with every President since then using the table for his actual swearing-in ceremony.

In recent years this historic piece has been making itself useful in Miss Charlotte Clark's house in Sandwich, on Cape Cod. Miss Clark who moved there after the death of her parents, glad to do her patriotic bit, had the table crated and shipped to D. C. Incidentally she's here herself to spend the winter months. Watch for "Washington By-Line," a book, whose title is self-explanatory, by an author who needs no introduction. WASHINGTON women—lucky girls that they are—have a wonderful excuse to "dress-up" this month—for the Inauguration, of course! Such a great to-do—there is to be. A parade . . . the Inaugural Gala . . . Receptions . . Little dinners for out-of-town guests . . . Huge dinners for in-town big-wigs . . . and, topping it off, the Inaugural Ball

Each event will call for the right outfit; tweeds for the parade, ankle-length and glitter for the afternoon hours, shimmering formal white for the ball

Above is the ideal afternoon-to-evening dress, a velvet and net ensemble by Nettie Rosenstein. The full skirt is gathered tightly with a wide waistband, the bodice rippling into a mass of flattering dotted net ruffles

This black enchanter is from the collection to be shown at the Inaugural Fashion Show tonight at 8 o'clock at the United Nations Club. Presented by Julius Garfinckel & Co., the show will feature fashions for every hour of the Inaugural day. Included also will be a selection of resort and cruise wear

Reception for Governors At Inaugural Tops Schedule

Tregaron, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Davies' home on Klingle rd., will be opened for an official reception by the inaugural committee in honor of Governors of States and other distinguished guests here for President Truman's inauguration. The party is expected to be held on Wednesday, January 19, and on that same afternoon Oscar Chapman, Undersecretary of the Interior, and Mrs. Chapman, have made plans for a reception at the Westchester Apartments, where they make their home.

Other festivities for which tentative dates have been set are a reception by Senator J. Howard McGrath, chairman of the Democratic National Committee at 7 p. m. Friday, January 21, at the Shoreham Hotel; a reception at the Woman's National Democratic Club from 4 to 6 on Friday, January 21. On that day many of the embassies will also entertain.

In addition there will be dances, receptions, dinners by State societies through inauguration week and a concert by the National Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Kindler, conductor, and Georges Enesco, as soloist, on Wednesday, January 19.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Angered by Brother's Constant Assertion That Man's Brains Are Commensurate With His Financial Success, Writer Asks Verdict

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have a brother who angers me quite often by making the statement that a man's brains can be determined by the amount of moneyed success he has acquired in his lifetime.

He furthermore actually believes that he is just as much above his fellowman as his amount of success has raised him; and quite often he uses the expression "better" or "above."

Now it is my contention that intelligence cannot be measured by such a limited yardstick, although I grant full credit to all successful and wealthy people. Brad, my brother, claims these people, were they so-minded, could turn their mental energies into any other channel with equal success.

I do not argue the point with him, but his assertions are a constant source of irritation to me; and would you please express your views on the subject for my benefit? Thank you. G. S.

Both Parties Have Comparable Anxiety

DEAR G. S.: Apparently your brother has achieved some degree of financial affluence, the materialist yardstick of worldly "success," and is inclined to be boastful about it, after the manner of the Pharisee who smugly thanked God that he was superior to "the common man" of his day.

Also I gather that you aren't so clever at money-making as he, and don't possess nearly so much of this world's goods, and that his assertions anger you, therefore, firstly because you feel disparaged by them, and perhaps suspect that his intent is to belittle you; and secondly because you don't know how to deal a logical or philosophical comeback that would conclusively deflate his brag, at least to your satisfaction. And it's the latter "rub" that hurts most, of course.

Your brother's tedious self-praise, as well as your touchiness, have identical significance. Both are sparked by an inferiority complex at the core of character. Thus regardless of his self-advertised brains, he hasn't achieved personal composure, and is no happier in his "success" than you are about your life-showing.

In all probability the intrinsic difference between you and him isn't one of brains, but of temperament. He reacts with driving anxiety to his hidden self-dissatisfactions, and seeks to silence them by showing himself smarter than other men, whereas you don't "fight" them with such nervous activity, but rather accept them with brooding passivity.

Many Fine 'Brains' Don't Chase Money

AS FOR Brad's view that a man's intelligence is commensurate with the degree of wealth he accumulates, I don't agree. In general, energy and desire, fixed on one consuming objective, namely: material self-advancement, are more essential than "brains" in making money.

Indeed many of the best "brains,"—using brains in the inclusive term of understanding, intellect and intelligence,—seek creative satisfactions in channels that haven't "money-making" as the chief end and single aim. In this category you will find Jesus, for instance, the author of Christianity.

Or dropping down to the more human level, we find in recent history Mahatma Gandhi, M. and Mme. Curie, Pasteur, Father Flanagan of Boys' Town and Franklin D. Roosevelt, whose most savage critics in the New Deal era used to charge that he "never made a dollar in his life,"—and yet he was able to out-smart most of them.

Patience and Loving Attention Are Needed by Whining Child

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Few mothers have the patience to deal with a whiny child. The demands made in this emotional way so aggravate the parent that she is inclined to refuse them, "just because."

Yet the child may be whiny and demanding because he does not have enough maternal attention of a satisfying kind. It is not because he has had so much attention that he is spoiled and must have more.

Such a child feels insecure. He believes, whether it be true or not, that he is not beloved. His mother's attitude toward and treatment of him, make him anxious.

This anxiety inspires him to want to be near the parent. He wants her to notice him, play with him, to suggest his games to him. He can't content himself with his own toys and playmates because he must make the continual effort to "get in good" with the mother, hold her attention by whatever means.

To scold the child or withhold attention only increases his lack of self-confidence and anxiety. It piles insult on injury and he becomes all the more whiny and demanding.

This may be one of several children, maybe that hapless, middle child of a family who is always hard put to find ways of making himself noticeable and significant.

It may be an only child whose mother is busy and who gives him attention only when he becomes naughty enough to warrant it.

Looked at calmly and not emotionally, the whiny child is in need of more loving attention to bolster his self-confidence and make it unnecessary for him to cling to the mother so possessively.

He needs praise for what he does. He needs to have his particular talents and capacities developed, so that he can feel some warm sense of accomplishment and superiority.

It is by such means that the parent frees the child from a warping sense of inferiority which leads him to want the mother's undivided attention and to try to get it by constant whining pleas for it.

Geographical Distribution Of Presidential Applause Slightly Disconcerting

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

A JOINT session of Congress, addressed by the President of the United States, makes an exciting spectacle. Yesterday, more carefully than ever before, incomers were scrutinized, vasty corridors awash with police, entrances to the House chamber scrupulously guarded.

Half an hour before President Truman delivered his State of the Union address, diplomats congregated in the office of Charles A. Eaton, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Cabinet, Senate, Representatives' wives were seated early. On the floor, dozens of legislators chatted. Outstanding were the ladies—"Cassie" St. George in slick black satin, her auburn hair becomingly haloed; Edith Nourse Rogers sporting a brace of orchids; Mary Norton, her blouse necklaced with rhinestones; Frances Bolton in pale gray, the new Cecil Hardin from Indiana, feminine despite her masculine name, wearing a rose in one of those tiny lapel vases; Margaret Chase Smith, Senator from Maine, alongside Owen Brewster, looking slimmer than ever, her fluffy silver hair glistening, an outsize red rose pinned to shoulder. This year no children were on the floor, but extraneous interlopers included such prized press members as The Washington Post's Folliard and, in crimson frock, former Representative Katherine Byron.

As the "dips" assembled under the watchful eye of Protocol Chief Stanley Woodward and Ray Muir, the Soviet Ambassador, Alexander Panyushkin walked in briskly, accompanied by an interpreter. None of the satellite chiefs-of-mission put in an appearance. So, perhaps, there's truth as well as wishful thinking in the rumored Kremlin policy split!

Front row in the diplomatic gallery was Madame Dendramis who, with her husband, the Greek Ambassador, flew off in the afternoon for a two weeks' visit to Athens. Beside her sat Mrs. Robert Lovett, lovely as ever, wearing a tiny hat of her favorite pinky-mauve color which was echoed by Signora Tachiani's cyclamen turban. Front row, too, was Mme. Wellington Koo with Mrs. Charles King, wife of the Liberian Minister.

They Could Be Sables

MRS. TRUMAN AND MARGARET arrived together and were handsomely applauded as they entered the gallery. The First Lady had on her usual black, the brisk white-banded-with-black hat that is one of her most successful autumn numeros. Margaret wore one of those new-look coats, falling loose from the shoulders, rippling out yards and yards of good-goods. Her black felt Cavalier chapeau increased its width with dashing pheasant tails. Both of the Truman ladies wore neckpieces of mink—or could they have been sables or martens?

Fashionably speaking, the smartest outfits were worn by Mrs. Truxtun Beale and Mrs. Brien McMahon. Both were in blue, Mrs. Beale's lighter tone trimmed with black Persian, Rosemary's a deeper shade. Some of the Cabinet ladies were there, too. Mrs. Brannan's flip white hat showed off the tan earned during her recent Miami sojourn.

After the House was called to order, the new sergeant-at-arms, Joe Duke, paraded in diplomats, then the Cabinet. Diplomats, oddly enough, act embarrassed at the smatter of polite applause, lope to their seats in giraffe-like strides. Their cavalcade, led by Norway's Morgenstierne, ending with Cuba's Belt, who still clutching hat, overcoat, nearly missed the show, was conspicuous this year for its Oriental envoys, Siam, Burma, China, Ceylon, India, Pakistan.

The Cabinet tramped in determinedly. A glamorous bunch of males, despite a few balding pates, a mild touch of embonpoint. Handsomest, from our high eyrie, were Secretary of Defense Forrestal, dolled up in a snappy striped cravat, and Labor Secretary Tobin, whose red sox went dandy with his gray suitings.

Galleries Add a Lick

THE PRESIDENT swung in cheerfully with his senatorial escort. Vice President Barkley was pink cheeked as a mature cherub, Senator Scott Lucas folded his length in an adjoining chair. President Truman, in steely gray, read his speech from a brown leather folder.

Geographically the applause was interesting to note. Most Democrats sat on the President's right hand, Republicans on left! The left figuratively sat on its hands, clapping only on politeness demand. The righters patty-caked such phrases as "privileged few," "being discredited financially," "the greatest prosperity the world has ever seen," "suffering from excessively high prices," "added rent controls," "THAT Act (Taft-Hartley) should be repealed." The gallery, where presumably a few hoi polloi had seeped in, went wild when the President said, "The minimum wage fixed by law should be raised to at least 75 cents an hour."

Up in the privileged gallery where Special Presidential Counsel Clark Clifford and Mrs. India Edwards, who headed feminine Democratic campaign activities, sat shoulder to shoulder, applause came in the oddest places.

Rated as Runner-up

THE speech ended, the President turned, smiling as almost always, downed a tumbler of water and, started back down the aisle, fondly hooked arm with his Vice President. Personal Hooper rating for the speech was high, topped only by President Truman's terrific fight-talk at Philadelphia's Convention.

Afterward, down in the Senate restaurant, Mrs. Truman, Margaret, Mrs. Vinson, Mrs. Mesta, Mrs. McMahon lunched together. At other tables, all obviously in a happy haze of well being now that the State of the Union had been officially reported "Good," were the Scott Lucases with the Bill Fulbrights; the Connallys, the McClellands, with Mrs. Leslie Biffle; the Owen Brewsters and just about every other Senator on the roster!

How to Prepare Pork Chow Mein

In answer to V. P.'s request for a simple recipe for making Chinese pork chow mein, I am sending you one from "New Chinese Recipes," by Fred Wing (United China Relief.)

Ge-Yok Chow Mein
(Pork Chow Mein)

In a preheated, heavy, 10-inch frying pan, place:
2 tablespoons oil or fat
1 teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
1 pound lean pork (cut in 1/3-inch cubes)

Cook over a moderately hot flame, stirring constantly until meat is brown. Add:
½ cup chicken bouillon
3 cups onion (finely sliced)

Cover pan tightly and cook over low flame for 10 minutes.

Blend together and add:
2 tablespoons cornstarch
2 teaspoons soy sauce
¼ cup water

Cook for a few more minutes, stirring constantly, until the juice thickens and the mixture is very hot. Serve immediately with hot, boiled rice and fried noodles. This recipe serves four persons.

R. S. W.

I have white, pyroxylin-coated table pads which I use on the dining room table. Can you tell me if there is anything that I could put on them to make them brown in color. A lace cloth doesn't look nice over the white.
B. M. C.

Furniture stain would change the color of the pads, but it's not a good idea to use it as the alcohol in the stain may make the pyroxylin peel. Having the pads covered with material resembling a wood grain would be better. This costs $3 to $7 for a pad of the most usual size, the price depending on the material used. Firms that do this work are listed under "Table Pads" in the yellow section of the telephone book.

Where could I buy a simple instruction book on water coloring? I have searched for some time and to date have found no book on the art of water coloring that actually tells one how to do it.
M. F. S.

Washington Artist Eliot O'Hara has written several books on water coloring that should be helpful to you. At least one large local bookshop sells them and they are also available at the Public Library. Titles of three of the books are: "Making the Brush Behave," "Making Water Color Behave," and "Water Color Fares Forth."

Can you tell me the names of several high schools in the District that offer beginning courses in shorthand at night?
V. H.

The following high schools have new classes in shorthand for beginners starting January 31: Chamberlin, 14th and Potomac ave. se.; McKinley, 2nd and T sts. ne.; Central, 13th and Clifton sts. nw., and Western, 35th and R sts. nw.

Can you tell me where I can get ladies' riding pants made from overall material? These are to be used in a small town where there are no cleaning facilities, hence the request for denim.
R. E. A.

We have been unable to locate a shop here selling such riding pants, although apparently they were formerly available. Perhaps some reader can tell us where they can now be purchased. Could you use blue jeans?

I sent a felt hat to the cleaners and since then it has become very flimsy and will not hold any shape. I wonder if there is any way this hat may be restored to hold shape?
C. H. D.

A firm that specializes in blocking ladies' hats might be able to restore yours by a good reblocking job if the felt isn't too badly damaged. You can locate such a firm by looking through the listings under "Millinery" in the yellow section of the telephone book.

Where in Washington can one get barber's and general household use shears sharpened?
I. G. G.

This work is done by concerns listed under "Barber Supplies" in the yellow telephone book.

Can you tell me where I could get felt (scrap) pieces? I used to get them when I lived down in Virginia, cut them in strips and make rugs.
V. A. R.

I do not know where to obtain felt scraps. However, I have a list of places (sent in by another reader) where you can obtain blanket scraps and the like for rug-making. If you'd like to have it, forward your name and address and I'll send it to you.

I noticed a recent letter about decorative screens and I thought perhaps your reader might be interested in this idea. Instead of screens to divide interior space, some friends of mine have used slatted porch shades stood on end. I am not sure whether these would be available now, but during the summer I saw such slatted shades advertised at $7 or $8 for the 6-foot length, which should be of sufficient height for a screen. All such shades seem to come in one color, green, but I imagine could be painted rather easily. An adventurous housewife might try decorating them with oil paints. Cloth or paper would not work on this type of thing. They are particularly successful as screens because they cannot stand up unless bent into curves, so that they divide the space while giving a feeling of freeness and lack of rigidity. Similar curved screens are frequently seen in the most modern interior decor for this very reason.

The Family Scrapbook

By Dr. Ernest G. Osborne

The Only Child

Most people have the idea that the only child is a spoiled child. This can happen, of course, and often does. But it isn't a foregone conclusion. As a matter of fact, a number of studies of only children show that many are very well-adjusted.

Like so many things, it all depends on parents. If you have but one child, you can see to it that he has a normal childhood even without brothers and sisters. There are always substitute brothers and sisters to be found. Neighborhood friends or cousins can be drawn into family life and make it possible for the only child to learn to share. He also can be helped to have experiences of being away from home so he does not become too dependent emotionally on father and mother. Visits to friends and relatives, summer-camp experiences and other out-of-home contacts are valuable.

So don't be worried as to what people say about only children. Whether a youngster becomes unduly self-centered or is outgoing, friendly and cooperative depends on the kinds of experiences and relationships he has. A little thought and planning on your part will help him grow up very normally.

Here Come 7 Brand New Sunday Comics

CHLORINE Blonde and brash, Chlorine is the unsuppressed secretary supreme. She talks to her boss the way most Washington girls wish they dared. A comic that's guaranteed to be pinned up by half the typists in Washington (who have the nerve).

OUR BILL What Penny did to expose the high school girl to the chortling public, Our Bill (drawn by that same betrayer of the teen-agers, Harry Haenigsen) does to unveil the thoughts, emotions, actions of the high school boy. A panic to parents!

BODYGUARD Handsome Ben Friday found ordinary life too sedentary after a war-time career in OSS. So he hired out as a bodyguard and found excitement enough, even for a comic strip hero. Bodyguard gives action and suspense in a well-drawn comic.

"EXPLORE YOUR MIND" Superb drawings, questions that will tease your mind (and get you into hot discussions with the family), with the answers supplied by Albert Edward Wiggam, Doctor of Science. A really adult—and stimulating—feature.

PIXIE PUZZLES At last! Something for the little kids the funnies were originally designed for (remember?). This feature gives the smaller children mazes to solve, optical illusions, puzzles to work, plus fascinating pixie characters.

TRAILWAYS Besides drawing Mark Trail on Sunday, Ed Dodd brings Post readers a Sunday strip on wild life. These little natural history lessons will delight youngsters in particular, and will be clipped for scrapbooks for use in school.

MARK TRAIL You know Mark, his girl, Cherry, and his big dog, Andy, from the daily strip, of course. Now they'll be coming to Post readers on Sunday, too. With really beautiful drawings of wild animals, all in full color for extra value.

GOP to Name Election Slate In Alexandria

Alexandria Republicans will nominate candidates for municipal offices at a primary April 5, the first Republican primary ever held in the city on a local level.

The primary will nominate candidates for the seven-man city council and other city offices to run in the June 14 general election.

The decision to hold the primary was taken Tuesday night at a meeting of the City Republican Committee.

Committee Chairman Nathan J. Paulson said the decision was taken in fulfillment of the party's November election pledges to the people of Alexandria "in the furtherance of a two-party system."

Previously, Republican candidates for city offices have been selected in convention. Candidates for the primary must file with Paulson by midnight February 4.

Democrats, who will also hold their primary April 5, must file with Gilbert J. Cox, jr., Democratic committee chairman, by the same February 4 deadline.

Minister Sues Buyer Over Church Use

Talmage Wilcher, Arlington real estate man, violated the terms of his deed when he used his office building for "other than religious purposes," it was contended yesterday in Arlington Circuit Court.

The charge was made in a suit filed by Rev. Francis J. Lukens, an Arlington Baptist minister. Lukens asked a judgment of $4820 he said was called for by a special covenant.

According to Frank Morgan, Lukens' attorney, the building at 1738 Wilson blvd. formerly was owned by Lukens, and used as a church. It was sold, with the special covenant to another Baptist minister, the Rev. Charles O. Benham, who also used the structure for religious purposes.

When Mr. Benham sold the building to Wilcher, the suit said, the special covenant still provided that:

"Should the premises . . . be converted wholly to other than religious purposes, the parties of the first part (Lukens) . . . shall be entitled to the additional sum of $4820.16."

According to Morgan, Wilcher has "wholly converted the property to other than religious uses" and refuses to pay the $4820 p nalty.

Miss Anna F. Hedrick, attorney for Wilcher, was granted a continuance until the next term of Circuit Court after she said a new argument had been added to Morgan's brief without her knowledge.

Crestwood Citizens Hear Dr. Lenski

Attitudes, not events, were termed most important in a person's life by Dr. Gerhard E. Lenski, pastor of Grace Lutheran Church, who addressed the Crestwood Citizens Association at Roosevelt High School, 13th and Varnum sts. nw.

Stressed as desired attitudes were: to be appreciative of the things our country has, to have a sense of balance and proportion, and to have courage. Undesirable attitudes were listed as: wishful thinking, self-pity and fear of meeting changes.

Speaking on "Guiding Stars for 1949," Dr. Lenski predicted a favorable year, basing this in part on "President Truman's courage to win despite the odds."

In its business session, the group indorsed the registration of undergraduate and practical nurses and asked for improved traffic control at Arkansas ave. and Upshur sts. Specifically, it asked either that the through route be changed from Arkansas ave. to Upshur st. or that four-way stop signs be erected. Upshur st. is the most traveled route by schoolchildren in the section, it was said.

Girl, 16, Escapes Serious Injury in Jump Off Bridge

A 16-year-old girl escaped serious injury late last night when she plunged from the Anacostia Bridge to the ground 20 feet below.

Examined at Casualty Hospital, she was transferred to Gallinger Hospital for observation.

According to police, the girl, who was not enrolled in school, stayed home during the day to care for a younger brother and sister while her parents worked.

Police quoted members of her family as saying she left home earlier in the evening to attend a party.

3 Are Named to Arlington Committee on Redistricting

Arlington Circuit Court Judge Walter T. McCarthy yesterday appointed three members to a redistricting committee that will consider a reshuffling of the county's voting precincts and polling places.

Named to the committee were Attorneys William D. Medley and Oren R. Lewis, and William G. Watt, a civilian official in the Navy's hydrographic office.

Medley, who is a Democrat, lives at 1716 N. Danville st.; Lewis, a Republican, lives at 3159 N. 17th st., and Watt an executive committee member of Arlington's Civic Federation, lives at 2600 N. 16th st.

Judge McCarthy was petitioned for the survey by the Arlington County board during the board's meeting last Saturday. The board acted on a request from Bankhead T. Davies, secretary of the Arlington Electoral Board.

In his letter to the board, Davies suggested, among other things, that the county's two largest precincts—Barcroft, with about 2500 registered voters, and Columbia with roughly 3000—be split up into several precincts.

Last month a three-judge panel, hearing a dispute over votes in the county's November election, recommended some precincts be split to lighten the burden on precinct officials.

Postlude

New Cowell Symphony Is Performed

By Paul Hume

Hans Kindler and the National Symphony Orchestra gave the first performance of Henry Cowell's Fifth Symphony last night in Constitution Hall.

Cowell, a native of California, has consistently applied himself to studies in contemporary rhythms and now acoustical possibilities in music. His symphony is scored for the usual orchestra, with particular attention to the percussion section. There are extended passages for xylophone solo, and important assignments for piano and two gongs, as well as orchestral bells and the more usual members of the "special effects" division.

The entire symphony is built on a simple four-note theme announced at the outset. While later movements treat this subject in its rhythmic patterns, in varying harmonic systems and in fugal style, the first movement consists principally of alternating compressions and extensions of the subject.

Second Most Eloquent

The second movement is the most eloquent of the four, with a rhapsodic melody in simple harmonies, sung by various instruments, over a frugal grouping of strings which enter canonically. As the strings pile up on one another, they form what Cowell has long labeled "tone clusters." This is an American equivalent for the extreme economy practiced by Oliver Messiaen in his most effective works for orchestra and organ.

The third movement of the symphony is the one most likely to succeed in repeated hearings. It is a virtuoso orchestral scherzo, scored with remarkable clarity. It occupies only 4 of the 25 minutes required for the entire symphony. Both this movement and the final section are clearly lodged in the key of A Major. Altered scales come and go, but the tonic-dominant relationship persists in establishing the key beyond question.

Finale Weakest

The finale seems weakest of the four movements. The composer finds no new way to handle his scant subject. Modal harmonies, massive chords and closing theatricals only emphasize the fact that the symphony accomplished its purpose in its first three divisions.

Kindler and the orchestra seemed tentative in the first portion of the first movement, but gained assurance from there on. The composer was prevented from attending by adverse flying conditions governing his arrival from Iowa.

The concert opened with a Handel prelude and fugue, and concluded with the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky.

Bonifant Flats Eviction Order Delay Is Voted

The Mayor and City Council of Takoma Park, Md., last night voted to hold in abeyance orders to evict the occupants of Bonifant Flats on Lake ave.

Chief of Police C. E. Thomas was instructed not to evict the 30 occupants until "they can find a place to live."

The flats were condemned several months ago, on recommendation of health and building authorities, as unfit for human habitation.

Ruben Reddix, father of 11 children, last night told the council that it was impossible for him to find a place to live, adding that "anything is good enough for you if you have no place to go."

The council accepted the resignation of Policeman Wells Skinner, who was suspended last Wednesday on a charge of absence without leave.

A hearing on a petition from 25 property owners on Cedar ave. who recently protested on zoning at 225 Cedar ave. will be held by Councilman Walter McClenon, the council's law and ordinance chairman, at 8 p. m. February 2 in the Municipal Building at 8 Columbia ave., it was announced. The property is owned by Roy C. Potts.

Public Library Monday Ends Half Century

The District's Public Library will mark a half century of service to the city Monday with special anniversary exhibits at the main building, 8th and K sts. nw., and at its 14 branches.

Today at 10 a. m. the District Commissioners will present a proclamation to Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, vice president of the library's board of trustees, commending the group for its work and urging residents to acquaint themselves with the library's facilities.

Since it opened its doors 50 years ago at 1326 New York ave. nw., the library has circulated more than 75 million books. Its staff, originally a librarian and two assistants, has grown to 333 full-time and 29 part-time assistants, while its book stock has increased from a collection of 15,000 volumes to more than 754,000 volumes.

The Library was established by Act of Congress on June 3, 1896. This act, which provided for a "free public library and reading room in the District of Columbia" was implemented by the appropriation bill passed on June 30, 1898. The original book collection for the first library came from the Washington City Free Library, organized in 1896 and supported by subscriptions and contributions of books by Washington residents.

The Central Library on Mount Vernon Square was erected from funds donated by Andrew Carnegie, and subsequent gifts by the Carnegie Corp. provided three additional branches. The administrative offices are housed in the library building at 499 Pennsylvania ave. nw.

In addition to its original circulation and reference services, the Public Library now offers directors for reading discussion groups, special service to handicapped boys and girls in the city's hospitals, direct service to classrooms and advisory service in various subject fields.

Man Is Hospitalized In Fall From Taxi

Ralph Clagett, 36, of 512½ 7th st. sw., was admitted to Casualty Hospital last night for treatment of head and back injuries.

Police reported he was hurt when he fell from a taxicab that had stopped on Rhode Island ave. ne., about 100 feet west of Lincoln rd. His condition was undetermined.

Wells to Test Ground for Atomic Poison

Upton, N. Y., Jan. 5 (U.P.).—The Atomic Energy Commission is taking steps to enable it to discover and prevent radioactive contamination of the air or the water near its nuclear reesarch center, the Brookhaven National Laboratory, it was announced today.

The laboratory announced that approximately 50 test wells would be dug around Brookhaven, located on Long Island about 50 miles east of New York City, to make certain dangerous radioactive materials are not entering the ground.

The announcement said the air tests also were being made for natural radioactivity, so that it will be possible to discover and halt the radioactive particles carried by the wind.

Purpose of the wells apparently was to make certain that drinking water is not contaminated.

It is known that construction of an atomic pile now is under way at Brookhaven.

The announcement tonight emphasized that there was no present danger. It stressed that all precautions were being taken so no danger would exist.

The announcement said survey work is being conducted by the U. S. Geological Survey at the request of the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission.

Mission Board Parley Argues Merger Issue

Buck Hill Falls, Pa., Jan. 5 (AP).—Delegates of the Foreign Missions Conference today argued a proposal to merge with a super Protestant body, but failed to reach a vote.

The Foreign Missions group represents 102 Protestant Foreign Misson boards of 61 denominations. A merger would combine it with the projected National Council of Churches of Christ in the United States.

The Rev. John T. Peters of New York, member of the foreign board of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, urged delegates to vote on the issue and told them:

"A postponement of the vote will be regarded by church members and the world at large as pussyfooting. The Protestant Church again and again has lost battles because it has been afraid to speak its mind."

Delegates representing the Presbyterian Church in the United States (Northern) favor the merger.

A motion to postpone the vote was offered by Dr. Ralph E. Diffendorfer of New York, retiring secretary division of foreign missions of the Methodist Church.

Dr. Diffendorfer, who earlier urged approval of the merger, said, "Our refusal to go in cannot hold up establishment of the national council."

Among those who argued against a merger was the Rev. M. T. Rankin of Richmond, Va., representative of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Queen Mary Sails For U. S. Following Delay of 5 Days

London, Jan. 5 (NYHT).—The Cunard White Star Line's 81,000-ton liner Queen Mary sailed from Southampton for New York at 1:56 p. m. (8:56 a. m., EST) today with more than 100 tons of concrete and slabs of fat plugging leaks in her damaged stern.

The liner was damaged last Saturday when it grounded on a sandbank at Cherbourg.

It returned to Southampton, and workers poured concrete into the stern to stop leakage. But this was not enough. More concrete was poured and divers put gobs of fat around loose rivets.

This morning, experts of Lloyd's of London and the Ministry of Transport issued a certificate of seaworthiness.

More than 1170 passengers were aboard. The liner is due at New York next Monday.

Girl, 18, Killed By B & O Train At Forest Glen

Miss Betty Pearl Conway, 18, of 1030 Fairmont st. nw., was struck and killed by a Baltimore and Ohio Railroad train late Tuesday night, Montgomery County police reported yesterday.

Police said the victim, who had been attending a party at the noncommissioned officers' club, Forest Glen Annex to Walter Reed Hospital, stepped into the path of the train at the Forest Glen station.

Her body was thrown 40 feet, police said. A certificate of accidental death was issued.

Woman, Scalded In Bathtub, Dies

A 66-year-old woman, scalded in her bathtub New Year's Eve died yesterday at Emergency Hospital. She was Mrs. Eva B. Lowen, who lived with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Hertz, at 6600 Luzon ave. nw.

According to police, she was alone in the apartment when she slipped in the tub and accidentally turned on the hot water spigot. She suffered second degree burns on the upper part of her body.

A certificate of accidental death due to burns was issued by Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner.

French Dog Owners Need Dictionary

By Stephen White

Paris, Jan. 5 (NYHT).—The French Kennel Club, apparently not without a brief period of soul-searching, has declared that all dogs born in 1949 must have names beginning with X.

This is expected to put an even greater strain on local dog lovers than was imposed upon them in 1948, when dogs had to be christened with names beginning with W. The French language, admirable as it may be in other respects, does not go in heavily for W's except for foreign words and words imported under the Marshall Plan, like W. Averell Harriman.

This doctrimaire nomenclature is the idea of the Society for the Improvement of the Canine Breed in France. Every year registered dogs are assigned a letter. Last year's dogs were named with W's, the year before with V's, the year before with U's. Thus, if you hear a dog owner shouting for "Vincent," you know that the animal was born sometime in 1947.

Thus conformity demanded that 1949 dogs be X-dogs. Convenience might have dictated a compromise of some sort—perhaps a return to A but today it was learned that X had won. X follows W and Y it will be.

An official said, however, that a dog-lover who wishes to name his animal "Matilda" can conform with the rules by naming it "X-Matilda," dropping the prefix when calling it to meals or introducing it to friends. Most dog owners will comply completely and we can expect to hear: "Come, Xavier," "come, Xenophobe," "come Xanthippe," "come Xerxes." It promises to be an extraordinary year along the Quais.

THE DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

If It's Cold, the Tenant Will Think He's in a Kelvinator

Marian Hammett, with the Inaugural Committee's housing bureau, comes up with another bright "sign of the times" report.

In the midst of a steady stream of calls from folks with extra rooms to rent, the bureau yesterday got one from a man who announced:

"I have two beds available at $2.50 each."

"Fine," said the worker who took the call. "What's the location of these accommodations?"

"In my Nash, parked out behind my house," was the unexpected reply. "I'll supply blankets and pillows, and will agree not to use the car during the term of the rental."

Miss Hammett concedes that autos which make up into beds hadn't occurred to the committee before—but in the Inaugural rush she suspects that the Nash will find no lack of applicants.

On the very first evening, he got tired of waiting for the elevator, and decided to walk downstairs.

But when he reached the bottom of the stairs, he found a padlocked door blocking his path.

So he retraced his steps to the second floor, and tried to get out there. But the doors leading from the corridors to the stair landings had been set to open from the corridor side only.

John was trapped in the staircase! He could go up or down to his heart's content—but not out.

So he finally had to beat on a door long enough and loud enough to bring help. And thereafter he vowed that he'd ride the elevators like everybody else, and stay out of trouble.

The next day, he got on the elevator, and it promptly got stuck between floors. Rescue crews had to extricate the passengers by lowering ladders to them.

Now John says that if he ever goes back to New York, they won't get him above the first floor of a hotel. If necessary, he'll sleep in the lobby.

DOWN BUT NOT OUT

John G. Hutchinson of 5105 Lowell lane nw. recently went up to New York for a few days, and was assigned to a third-floor hotel room.

TIP TO INVESTORS

The current rash of year-end financial statements reveals the wisdom of putting part of your capital into land.

The National Savings and Trust Co., whose balance sheet adds up to more than 85 million dollars, lists "real estate, other than banking house" as a $1 asset.

However, in the 101 million dollar total of the Perpetual Building Association, "office building, equipment and land" are carried as a $2 asset.

Obviously, the addition of the "land" has doubled the value of the holdings.

(And how we'd all love to buy them at that figure.)

NEW SENATOR SET FOR BIG SEASON ON HILL

When the Washington Senators last month traded Mickey Vernon and Early Wynn to Cleveland for Ed Robinson, Joe Haynes and Ed Klieman, Klieman immediately issued a hot statement to the press.

He announced that he'd just bought a house in a Cleveland suburb, and that he would not come to Washington. Unless, of course, Clark Griffith came through with a whopping contract.

The Old Fox countered with the mild observation that he'd heard that kind of talk before, but when the season starts, the hired hands are usually in uniform.

From an old friend of mine in Cleveland comes word that Griff was right, and that Klieman will be a Nat pitcher this season.

My source is Paul Hodges, one of Cleveland's outstanding television performers. He did a daily program from the ball park last year, and knows the Indians well.

Paul reports that Klieman got "a nice letter from Mr. Griffith, who offered him a good contract." That changed his mind about joining the Nats.

Now he's en route to Washington to confer with Griff and, as Paul puts it, "to try to shake the Old Fox loose from a little more dough. He will undoubtedly score a loser in this first starting role of the new season, but he'll play anyhow."

It seems Paul not only knows Klieman, he also knows Griff.

NEW YORK.—Mrs. Mischa Elman telephoned Barney Greengrass, the seafood and delicatessen specialist, and ordered 2 pounds of sturgeon and 2 pounds of smoked salmon iced and shipped to a friend in Hollywood. "I'd like it shipped air-freight before tomorrow," she said . . . "Tomorrow is impossible," said Greengrass. "I wouldn't even do it for the King of England" . . . "The King of England, no," said Mrs. Elman, "but would you do it for Mischa Elman? I'm Mrs. Elman" . . . "How do I know?" asked Greengrass . . . Mrs. Elman called to her husband, who was practicing in the next room, and called him to the phone. The violinist played "Ave Maria" into the mouthpiece . . . "Well?" asked Mrs. Elman . . . Greengrass replied: "Now about that sturgeon and smoked salmon—did you say 2 pounds?"

Time, Inc., which invited Evelyn Waugh to make his recent visit to America, now is anxious about Waugh's next novel—fearful that he may write a "Loved Ones" about the Luce enterprises. Waugh spent much of his time with the magazine editors and executives, quietly probing . . . Erika Mann, daughter of Thomas Mann, is bringing a libel suit against Echo der Woche, an American-licensed newspaper in Germany, for having labeled her a Red . . . Henny Youngman, who just finished an engagement at the Diamond Horseshoe, is sending out announcements: "I feel like Fanny Brice; I've just left Billy Rose."

Sister Kenny will wear a white Gay Nineties costume at the Waldorf's Knickerbocker Ball . . . France at last has discovered William Saroyan. His "Time of Your Life" and "My Heart's in the Highlands" will be produced in Paris . . . Dr. Albert Einstein attended a party in his honor, at the home of James N. Rosenberg, the lawyer-artist. When Dr. Einstein appeared on the balcony of the two-story room where the reception was being held, the guests all started to applaud. Dr. Einstein, before descending the staircase, held up his hand to stop the applause. "Please, no," he protested. "I am not an opera singer."

Dry each icecube thoroughly. With the towel. That's it—
They still feel kind of wet, Mr. O'Malley.
If the idea was tried for rain, why not snow? The fellow dropped the dry ice from his plane at a pretty fair height—
It may take me a while to climb to a pretty fair height. A couple of hours or so. And it's clouded over too! Low ceiling—
Gosh—
I'll have to hurry up! There's a storm of some kind brewing—

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Actor Blasts Red Investigators

By Drew Pearson

One of the most highlighted witnesses ever to appear before the Un-American Activities Committee was glamorous Robert Taylor, star of "Escape," "Stand By for Action," "A Yank at Oxford," "Bataan," "Billy the Kid" and many other pictures. His testimony made front-page news across the country.

TAYLOR

What never was published, however, is that Witness Taylor also wrote the Un-American Committee a scorching private letter blasting its tactics and accusing it of merely being interested in publicity. Taylor's letter is something Congress may want to consider in relation to the committee's procedure in the future.

Taylor was asked to testify regarding the picture, "Song of Russia," in which he acted. His testimony, taken in private, was later published, following which Taylor wrote this blistering letter:

"I've never cared a whole helluva lot for politicians, whether they be Republican or Democrat. And I've certainly never believed it inherent in my job as a motion-picture actor to aid in feathering any of their nests for them via publicity from my name—a name, by the way, which I have worked hard to build and maintain without any blemish.

"My last appearance to testify was valuable only insofar as publicity was concerned; my appearance in Washington can be valuable purely for the same reason. I firmly believe this to be utterly ridiculous and a waste of time, both for me and for the committee!

"These investigations, the way they are being run in Washington at the moment, remind me more of a three-ring circus than of a sincere effort to rid the country of a real threat.

"There's nothing any of us are going to tell them in Washington that the FBI didn't know five years ago. Maybe it's easier to call 20 friendly names from Hollywood than to have a look at the FBI files! Maybe it's better publicity for the home-State electorate, too!"

White House Callers

President Truman has been running true to form when it comes to White House visitors. He hasn't changed a bit since election. If members of the Turkey Growers Association are in town, or a big distiller or a youngster who has received a prize in school, they get in to see the President—if they ask for an appointment.

In other words, the people Truman sees are largely a hit-and-miss matter depending on his secretaries and his military aide.

For instance, on the list of White House callers recently were Louis Rosenstiel, head of Schenley's Distillers, and Frank Verbest, brewer of Blatz beer. Both men had bet wrong on the election and wanted a chance to make their peace with the little man who won.

Rosenstiel was so sure Dewey would win that he retained Herbert Brownell, Dewey's campaign manager, as his attorney, and invited Dewey for "a yachting cruise after his victory." But having been wrong, Rosenstiel contributed to the Democrats and asked for a chance to go in to see Truman.

Truman saw him.

On the other hand, former Secretary of Interior Ickes took off his coat during the campaign, traveled out to Montana at his own expense, made powerful speeches which swung liberal votes to Truman.

In return, two months after election, Mr. Truman, until this week, did not even invite Ickes to the White House to thank him for his help.

New Tennessean Feud

The White House is caught in a rip-roaring feud between the two Tennessee Senators—oldster Kenneth "Slugger" McKellar and freshman Estes Kefauver.

So far McKellar hasn't taken one of his famous pokes at the junior Senator from Tennessee. But before Kefauver so much as took office, McKellar opened up with a verbal volley. The Senate dean suspected that Kefauver would want to appoint several Tennesseans to Federal jobs, so he fired a blistering, six-page letter at him.

Anxious to get along, Kefauver called on the irate McKellar and tried to pacify him. But the peace mission backfired, and McKellar broke loose with a new charge—that Kefauver hadn't done anything to help reelect President Truman. Kefauver chided McKellar for this.

The senior Tennessean, unpacified, carried the feud to the White House. Writing a letter to Mr. Truman, he completely twisted Kefauver's remarks.

"I am informed," McKellar wrote the President, "that Mr. Kefauver is claiming to have helped you in Tennessee. This claim is without the slightest foundation. The papers which supported him, with one exception, were against you . . . and since the election he has admitted to me personally that he had not mentioned your name except in his opening speech, and in the newspaper account of that first speech, he merely said he was going to vote for you as the lesser of two evils.

"I am informed he is now circulating the report that the White House has given orders to look only to his recommendations in making Tennessee appointments. I do not believe this and I think he is attempting to perpetrate a wrong on the various executive departments."

Learning of McKellar's letter, the younger Tennessean sent a letter of his own to the White House, briefly citing the record of his own speeches for Truman.

The President apparently sided with Kefauver for he sent back an understanding letter saying he had been in politics too long not to appreciate the true situation in Tennessee.
